Tangerines Make A Decorative Dessert

NATURALLY, you'll want to utilize lots of little zipper-skin fruit from Florida right now at the peak of its season. Tangerines are good for the kiddies as snacks, and so easy for the cook of the house to use in making picture-salads or desserts like these Baked Tangerine Blossoms.

Baked Tangerine Blossoms

1/4 teaspoon cinnamon
Dash of salt
1 tablespoon melted butter or margarine
1/2 cup Florida orange juice

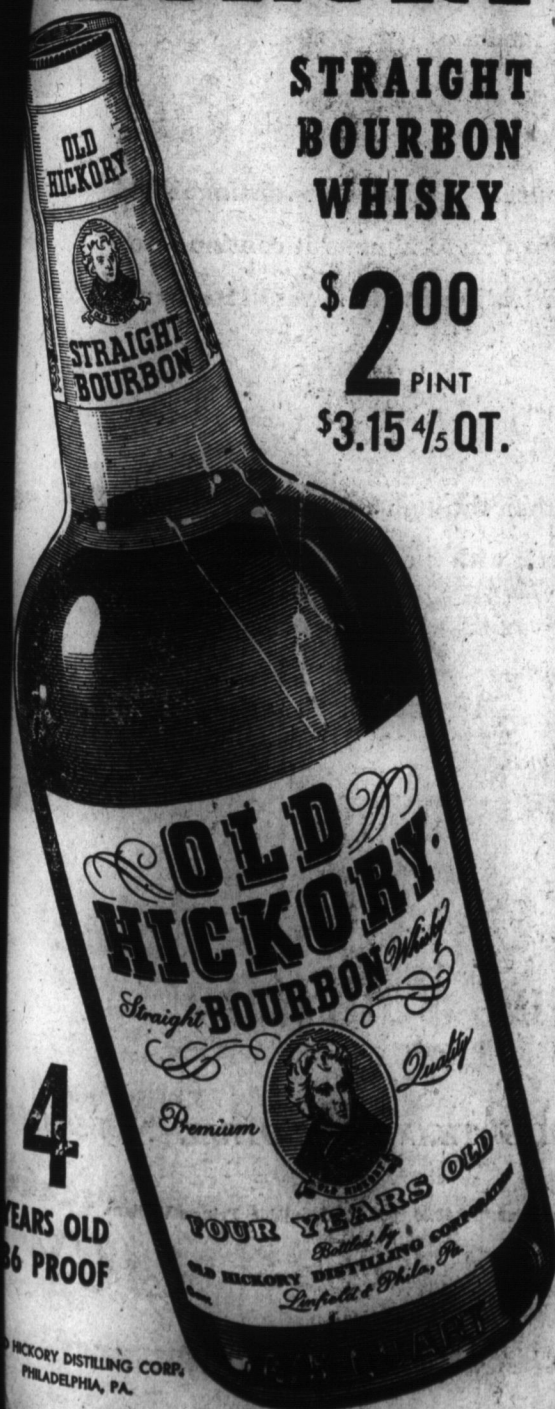

Make tangerine "blossoms" by making five vertical cuts in the tangerine skin from the blossom end to about 1 inch from the bottom; then peel "petals" down and turn the pointed ends in. Remove white membrane. Loosen tangerine sections at the center and pull apart slightly; set in shallow baking dish. Combine remaining ingredients except orange juice, and pile into center of tangerines. Pour juice over all and bake in a hot oven (400°F.) for 15 minutes, basting during baking. YIELD 6 servings

ANOTHER CHRISTMAS

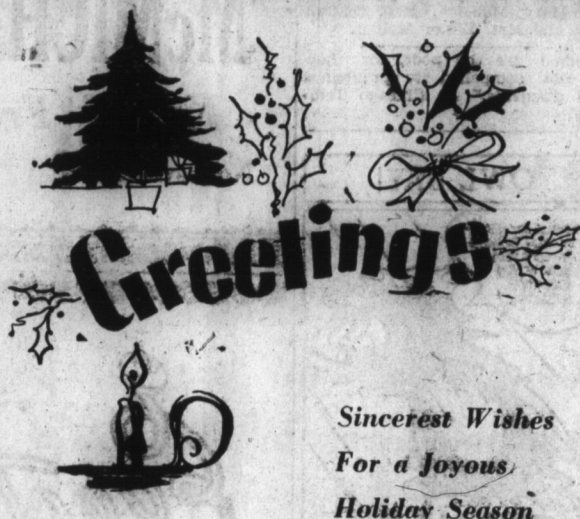

[Literary gems are not rare in those newspaper columns devoted to "Letters to the Editor." Here is an example from The Evening Star, Washington, D. C. Except for tropical environment, the correspondent depicts the outlook—and the prayers—of American combat soldiers in the forthcoming Christmas season.]

Driving tropical rain beat a steady tattoo on steel helmets, as little rivers ran down the folds of the green and brown camouflaged jungle ponchos. Combat boots shifted restlessly in the mud and muck. The eerie flickering light of one lone candle, shielded from the rain by a battered meat can, drew all eyes to the leader. Here were 36 men—American soldiers—some 10,000 miles from home on a New Guinea beach. They were singing Christmas carols, and their eyes and cheeks were not wet entirely by the rain.

Now it seems long, long ago, and some of the 36 won't remember that Christmas eve, when they lifted their voices in praise of a little child. They aren't here to remember. But those of us who are will never forget that night. The candle and meat can might have been in Bethlehem of Judea, in a great cathedral in Europe or in a little country church anywhere in America. The place or time didn't matter. As we sang, our hearts were with our loved ones, and quiet prayers rose from aching hearts for a chance to make Christmas mean something different the next December or maybe the next one after that, if we were lucky.

Those who came back will sing carols again this year wherever they are. These old songs mean more than ever. And maybe, if we carry them in our hearts through all the days of the year to come, we can do our bit to bring the birthday of the Prince of Peace—and all it should mean—into the hearts of all men everywhere.
