VARIETY,

WAR.

SEE bloody discord lifts his envious head,
And shakes the hissing sergents from his hair,
Then o'er the earth sees wild confusion spread,
And hastening ev'le beckon'n despair.

Who now with cheerfulness shall smiling toil,
And happy view the children of his care!

Say who with industry shall dress the soil,
For who the wife her frugal store prepare!

Must the delight that deckell the honest brow,
The tender father fat and silent droop
The smile contented, and healthy glow,
Alike, be banquished from the guiltless group?

No more the hand of industry must glean,
The well earned morsel from the yielding earth;
No more with thanks the humble breast must teem,
But looks must speak, and sighs deplore the dearth.

Wild with despair the distressed father flies,
To seek for Death, or Glory in the field,
Distracted sights to stop his children's sighs,
And manly bleeds, the bitter bread to yield.

The widow's tears must wet the barren'd ground,
The scanty crust in tears his offering steep,
Yet useless still go on and these years have found,
When father, husband, friend they have to weep.

CHARLOTTE.

Elegant CHARACTER of a late AMERICAN OFFICER.

HE was born of very reputable and wealthy parents, in the state of Connecticut.—After he had finished his English education in the vicinity of his parents, he was sent to New-Jersey College. From his fertile imagination, his vivacious temper, and his boundless propensity for learning, he soon became thoroughly acquainted with the classicks. In so grateful a soil as his genius he was next to impossible for education not to have flourished. He left the seminary at a very early period; happily uniting the qualities of the unaffected scholar, with the refinements of the polite gentleman.—His affability was so pleasing, as his manner was engaging; no equal envy to provoke flattery, and no superiors to be arrogance. His sensible disposition brought him friends without money or without price, and the expectancy of his virtues taught others to follow him wherever he went. At the age of eighteen, he was promoted to the command of a regiment; and it may appear somewhat surprising, that at so early a period he was capable of leading the vivacity of youthful impetuosity, with all the sober maturity of experience. After the termination of the Indian and French war against the British—in which he acquired great honor—he sheathed his sword—in its peaceful scabbard—in order to enjoy the fruits of his toils—the sweets of retirement.—But his faculties were of too active and of too great a nature, to delight in the shade of private life. He therefore thought he would carry them to a Theatre, on which he might display their usefulness to more advantage. He embarked for England and possessing an affluent fortune, he carried with him recommendations, equivalent to his money. He was introduced to the late Earl of Chesterfield—and, on account of his address as a gentleman, together with the script of his military character, presented him to the King, who received him very graciously. After being initiated into the gay and polite circles, and treading a perpetual round of pleasures, till he became perfectly satiated with the enjoyments of a court life, he bid adieu to his patron and friend, Lord Chesterfield, and to England, and arrived in a few weeks in his native place—where he was received with equal joy and surprize by his parents and relations: The uncommon brilliancy of his equipage, & other exterieur appendages of splendour, kept some of his former acquaintances for some time at an awful distance; But though perhaps he might have left some of his virtues behind him, and in their stead have brought a spice of some vices, yet he preserved his good understanding unimpaired, which made him on all occasions accessible to former friendships. His house was a perfect Level of joyous entertainment; his doors turned on the hinges of hospitality, and gladness sparkled in the eyes of all his guests. But the manners of these sober Republicans, viewing with some concern the growing evils which might result from too great an indulgence in the voluptuous scenes, persuaded his parents to throw a gentle check on his eccentrick enjoyments.—and they married him to an amiable woman. The cares of a growing offspring, in some measure wore off his intimate appetite for convivial society. The American war came on, and he being a friend to the bleeding cause of imploring freedom, gallantly espoused her injured rights. He fought a good fight, and completed the glory of his profession. But the seeds of debauchery and extravagance, which had been too profusely sown in his European pleasures, sprang up afresh with redoubled vigour—his constitution wasted away—his fortune, and at length he fell an untimely victim to the chymical produce of the bottle! In order to give a finishing stroke to the features of his character—nature, as if anxious that so bright a pattern of her works should be set in the fairest light, had bestowed on him all bodily accomplishments; dignity of shape and air, with a pleasant, manly and open countenance; his exterior comeliness could only be surpassed by the intellectual polish of his mind. Reader—drop a tear of sensibility on this misfortune, and spend this nettle from his grave.

Alas! that so fair a flower should be withered by a rude blast of DISSIPATION in Prince William, adjoining the Estate of the late General Nelson, containing 407 acres, about 300 of which are clear'd, and of a good soil for farming. This land is situated in one of the most genteel, and agreeable neighbourhoods in any country place in Virginia; and is 35 miles distant from the city of Washington, the towns of Alexandria and George-Town, and 25 from Dumfries. It is needless to say more of the qualities or conveniencies of the land, as I would wish those inclined to purchase to view it, for which they will have an opportunity by applying to Captain William Cundiff, of whom they may also be informed the terms, which are extremely easy for the purchaser. If the land is not sold by the 20th of August, it will be rented by Captain Cundiff.

A TRACT of LAND

City of Richmond

Wednesday, June 1, 1796.

This day came on before the Honorable Judges Iredell and Griffin, in the Federal Court Holden in the Capitol, the long controlled and important cause between Thomas Daniell, Jeweller and Goldsmith, late of the City of London Plaintiff, and William Wilson and Wm. Hunter, Merchants of Alexandria, Securities for James Scott, Factor of New York, for illegally imprisoning and afterwards levying an attachment on the property of the said Thomas Daniell, on a wicked, malicious, and ill grounded charge, preferred by said Scott, viz. of his having absconded from a commission of bankruptcy, and bringing away his effects; and that he stood indebted to Wm Hollingsworth (a non entity) and to Merle, Miller, and Hollingsworth, of London in the sum of fifty thousand pounds sterling; all which allegations were completely confuted by the most respectable and well attested evidence of the court in oral, printed &, and written documents. After a very lengthy, ingenious and learned discussion of the cause, by Messrs. Randolph, Marshall, Warden, and Mason Council for the Plaintiff, and Messrs Washington and Wickham for the defendants, before an enlightened and intelligent jury, they brought in a verdict finding for the Plaintiff Eighteen Hundred Dollars Damages, and all costs by him in this suit expended, much to the gratification of the Honorable Court, and a crowded auditory, and every one who despises tyrants and loves LIBERTY.

* The Printed Catalogue of the Plaintiffs Stock in trade, identified as genuine by Mr George Brazier.

The subscriber, late merchant of the city of London, does hereby certify, That he embarked for the Port of Baltimore in the ship Charlestown in the month of February last, 1796, where we arrived on the 27th day of march following and that a few days ago he casually met in this city Mr Thomas Daniel, whom he has known upwards of twenty years, together with many of his connections and creditors, particularly Mr Wm Merle, Assignee to Mr Daniell's estate as well as Messrs Hollingsworth and Miller.—That he had a short time before he left England, several hours conversation with Mr Merle, who has the entire Assignership—That he expressed himself very sorrow for the agent's conduct (James Scott of New York and more particularly for Mr Daniell's sufferings—same time observed he was a very trifling creditor of sixty or seventy pounds, and that when a dividend was made he did not expect to lose a shilling by Mr Daniell.—That near the whole of Mr Daniell's real creditors were against sending out any authority to Mr Scott, the far greater number declaring they would rather save him all in their power.—That he was a near neighbour of Mr Daniell's—That he never heard Mr Dinnell was accused of taking any of his effects with him, or his character impeached of any act whatever dishonest or dishonorable; On the contrary, he never had a claim on his credit, and was when he went away in affluence, and as much beloved as any man in the Goldsmiths trade in the city of London.—That Mr Daniell's effects were withheld from being sold full four months contrary to the established rule in cases of Bankruptcy; and that the Lord Chancellor had not thought fit to order any dividend on his estate when this deponent came away.—That the printed catalogue now in Mr Charles Purcells hands, Jeweller of this city, is a genuine one of Mr Daniell's stock in trade, as published by the Lord Chancellor's Commission.—That Mr Merle informed this deponent that in consequence of Mr Daniell's absence, on account of security ships, their was double the sum proved on his estate that it owed.—That Mr Wm Miller was for many years employed as an emaller and diamond setter—a small creditor, and never reputed to be worth more than four or five hundred pounds in his life.—That Mr John Hollingsworth is a nominal partner in the house of Messrs Prescot, Grove, Culverdon and Co. with the very liberal salary of 500 sterling per annum.—That Mr Daniell would be cordially received by his creditors in London, and might receive his certificate any time he pleased to request the same.—That Mr Daniell could have commenced four or five times as much credit as the whole of his debts in London, including security ship and every other demand against him.—That it the general opinion of Mr Daniell's creditors, that had Mr Scott followed his instructions as a mediator, instead of a persecutor; that an intercourse and compromise would have taken place, highly beneficial to the state; and that Mr Scott's resource to law was never intended, and what has been done is greatly regretted by the whole body of his creditors.—That Mr Daniell's house trade and business went on as usual for near three weeks before any bankruptcy took place, after this departure from London. That Mr Daniell inherited a good fortune with his fathers trade.—That he maried a lady who possessed a handsome dowry. That he was for more than twenty years a liberty man and a propritary sharee of Goldsmith Hall Coporation, which could always have supported him very far above indigence.
