HIDDEN MONEY

Statistics show that the percentage of money lost outside of banks is greater than that lost through bank failures by over 240 per cent. And yet people will store their money away in stockings, bureau drawers, mattresses, carpets, etc. Waiting for the thieves and flames. The stories of serious and pitiable losses of this kind published during the past year would fill a volume. They show that many murders have been caused by hidden money—in some cases for ridiculously small amounts. CHARLES BLAKE CLARKE.

INTERESTING LECTURE TO CLIFTON FARMERS.

MISS AGNEW TELLS OF HER WORK

Prof. Harry M. Lannon, of Washington and Co. of the National Bureau of Animal Industry, Washington, D. C., will give a lecture...

On Tuesday night, June 25, the people of Clifton were given a rare treat in the Presbyterian Church.

The chairman, W. H. Richards, opened the meeting by singing one verse of America. Rev. Wm. H. Edwards offered a short prayer, after which the chairman introduced Miss Ella G. Agnew, of Burkeville, this state.

Very earnestly concerning her work among the girls of the Virginia Tomato Clubs. She gave some very graphic descriptions of incidents that had occurred in her work, and said that the work was not only meritorious and needed, financially, by the girls, but helped them build up a better and a stronger physique.

The name and number of the camp is Stonewall, 15120 and the regular monthly meeting night will be fixed at the next meeting of the camp which will be on Wednesday night, July 10. There are ten or more applications for membership now pending which will probably be acted upon at the next meeting of the camp.

Miss Agnew impressed every one with the nobleness of honest toil, making of our lives one grand adventure and that the only road to success is work, work, work.

"The most vital part of life is the home and therefore the girls should be trained to be home makers," said the speaker.

Prof. Harry M. Lannon, of the National Bureau of Animal Industry, Washington, D. C., was the next speaker, who gave us a very brief outline of the poultry club work, and who said he hoped ere long to be able to give a more extensive outline of the work, which he is just starting.

We then enjoyed a short but highly talk from Prof. Cobb, of Hise, who has charge of Educational work in his state, and we are sure his state must be proud of him and his work.

After the conclusion of Prof. Cobb's remarks, we had the pleasure of hearing Prof. O. H. Benson, of the Bureau of Plant Industry, who gave us a talk on training the boys and girls in the H's, namely: head, hands, heart and health, and to make them strong men and women, trained equally in each of these qualifications.

He had great stress on the fact that we must train the head, hands, heart and health, equally, to make men and women who will be of the most value in the home, the community and the world at large.

He illustrated his lecture throughout with stereopticon views and concluded by giving us the view of Christ as a boy, bringing out the thought that Christ, by his life of common toil, had ennobled toil and made common things and common people more noble.

The fact seemed to be impressed on all, that while "all work and no play" makes Jack a dull boy, it is just as true that "all play and no work" makes Jack a laxy boy.

Therefore, we are to endeavor to train the young men and women to be men and women to make a success, not only of merely earning and accumulating money, but what is better making life brighter and happier for those about us.

We people of Clifton feel very grateful to the government officers who make this an enjoyable evening possible.

The admission fee to membership is $5 and medical examination fee for beneficial members, only $1.25. Each camp fixes its own annual dues which will not exceed $1, to be paid quarterly, which dues are used for incidental expenses of the camp. A capitation tax of $1.20 is levied upon the fund of each camp for its proportional expense of the general management.

The order has now on hand a surplus fund of $12,000,000 which is devoted to the payment of death claims, and has also a general fund of over one million dollars for expenses of general management. Several members who are admitted to the order without regard to age above eighteen, and those who are unable to pass medical examination may enter the uniform class and enjoy all privileges except office and life insurance.

The order has a scientific auxiliary known as the Royal Neighbors of America, with a large membership throughout the middle west.

After the election of officers speeches were made by Capt. Beach, and others of the Washington camp and by Dr. Wine and other members of the newly organized camp, along the line of fraternal and other advantages pertaining to members of the order, and the Spittoon Bros. Curators of the Washington camp.

Several interesting and pleasing numbers, including a recitation of "The man with the hoe" as an example of one who is only trained in one H—the hands. He then pictured the man trained in the head only—the man buried in a book and ignorant of seeing nothing else. Now these are equally one-sided, he said.

LOVE ALWAYS FINDS A WAY

BY ENRIQUE NOUS

Tom Hewlett had scarcely finished his remarks when Miss Ridgley, with crimson cheeks, disappeared from the parlor and hastened to her room.

"What had transpired since she started upon her early morning drive seemed all to her a dream: It was the sweet memories of the one who had blighted to her his life, and the anxiety to visit and shed upon his lonely wife her pent up tears, that induced her to brave the difficulties and the uncertainty of her errand."

"Deep down in her heart she felt that she loved Tom Hewlett, still there was a fearful struggle for mastery between the old love and the new."

"I shall not let him know how much I really care for him until I have put him to the severest test, for some men are deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked," she soliloquized.

Arranging her toilet and wearing one of her most becoming gowns she descended to the parlor where sat Mrs. Fewell and her three daughters.

"You look weary, Miss Ridgley, I hope you are not really troubled by the heat in tones of solicitude. I feel a little fatigued after the long ride I had over the turnpike—nothing more," replied the young girl in her effort to conceal her real feelings.

"Sunber is ready, Miss Sally; some while the biscuits are hot," said Mrs. Fewell, and she poked her good humored face in the doorway.

When Tom Hewlett seated himself at the supper table Carrie Ridgley was in animated conversation with a handsome youth who had reached Manassas by the southbound evening train and who registered as Eugene Leonard, of Washington.

"The discovery was quite satisfactory to Miss Ridgley and she rather enjoyed the effect of the false part she was playing to test his avowed affection."

"Finishing his meal in silence, Tom Hewlett arose from the table and with a furtive glance at the object of his love and her newly made acquaintance he left the room and hastened through the veranda where he lit a cigar and entered into conversation with Col. Fewell upon the subject of the removal of his brothers remains, and of incidents connected with the great civil war.

"Goodbye, my friend," said Col. Fewell as Tom Hewlett stepped aboard the northbound train, two days after the departure of Miss Ridgley; "let me know when you have made discovery number three concerning that pretty little New York girl and I'll try to be on hand to give you my blessing," continued the general, followed by one of his hearty laughs.

"Father," said Carrie Ridgley, the morning after her arrival at home, "when you gave your consent to my engagement to marry Capt. Hewlett, on the eve of his going the front I did I think of the revelation which I am about to make to you and when, with your permission, I sought to locate his grave upon the plains of Bull Run, where he fell and died, I had little thought that in doing so I would make a discovery which would change the current of my life and lead me once more to you to pass judgment on my choice of a husband."

"I leave you by the early train tomorrow morning," was the announcement made to Mrs. Fewell and her daughters by Miss Ridgley, upon her return to the parlor. "I have just received a telegram from father, calling me home at once."

"I trust nothing serious has happened," was the hostess' rejoinder. "No," replied the young girl, "father will sail for Europe in a few days and he says I may be company him," continued she.

needs the seal of your approval to terminate my marriage. He is the very counterpart of his dead brother and I am quite sure you will like him. I expect him to visit me tomorrow night and my final answer to his proposal depends upon your approval or disapproval."

"Your happiness is my own my darling," said her father in tones of deepest affection, "and if Mr. Hewlett measures up even to an approximation of the amiability of his brother I assure you I will interpose no objection to his making you his wife."

When the express from the South pulled into Grand Central depot, the next evening, Carrie Ridgley was there to meet her lover. Entering a carriage they were driven to the home of the Ridgleys on Fifth avenue, and Tom Hewlett was ushered into the presence of the young girl's father upon whose pleasure depended his future happiness or misery.

"After the formalities of acquaintance, and Carrie Ridgley had gone to her room, Mr. Ridgley discussed with Tom Hewlett the incidents of his daughter's trip to Virginia, and its results. "Yes, it was truly a strange coincidence," said his guest, "and one which, with me, has been a blessing upon you."

"The end." "If you are a housewife you cannot reasonably hope to be healthy or beautiful by washing dishes, sweeping and doing housework all day and crawling over bedsteads and stairs at night. You must get out into the open air and breathe July 2. This school has had a remarkable growth both in numbers and in its success in helping teachers to secure better certificates. ### THE SELECTION OF A CREAM SEPARATOR

The selection of a separator is not a difficult matter if the farmer will bear in mind a few simple facts.

Cream and skim milk are separated in the cream separator by the action of centrifugal force. Centrifugal force is a force exerted outward from the center of a separator bowl and is produced by revolving the bowl at a high rate of speed. Just what the action of centrifugal force is can be best explained by a simple and often-used illustration.

When a ball attached to the end of a string is swung around in a circle, the ball, because of its weight, will exert an outward pull. The force exerted on the ball, which makes it try to get away from the center point around which it is whirling, is centrifugal force. When whole milk enters the separator bowl it is acted upon by centrifugal force and the heavy milk solids are thrown to the outer wall of the bowl, which is the heaviest part of milk, is not so strongly affected, and gathers near the center of the bowl when it mixes with a small amount of skim milk and forms cream.

long service it must contain the highest quality of material and workmanship and be designed to accomplish a thorough separation of cream from milk without leaving itself to pieces. Spiral cut gears are now used in the best separators because they run smoothly and prevent lapping, loosening, or breaking of teeth. They do this because they have four teeth in mesh when spur cut gears have one tooth in mesh at a time. The separator gears are mounted on shafts in the bowl and will cause it to vibrate and do poor work. Hence, the value of smooth-running spiral gears can easily be appreciated.

The quality of material used in making the gear will materially affect the life of the separator. The best material for this purpose is cast iron. Tough, close-grained iron is the best material for this purpose as it wears smoothly and does not give or cut. The separator gears should be made of a material that is harder than the material of the separator and among the most expensive parts of the machine and should be protected from wear as much as possible. In the better grades of cream separators, phosphor bronze bushings are used to protect the frame and operating mechanism. This is a very tough, fine-grained metal which does not cut the parts moving in it. It is slightly softer than the steel shafts and spindles which move in it, and wears the shafts and spindles.

Herein lies the value of the bushings which can be replaced at a very small cost whereas it would be a considerable expense to replace the shafts, spindles, and bearings. The bowl spindle or neck bearing of a separator is one of the features a farmer should carefully investigate. The bearings should be made of a material that is harder than the material of the bowl and should be protected from wear as much as possible. The bearings should be made of a material that is harder than the material of the bowl and should be protected from wear as much as possible.

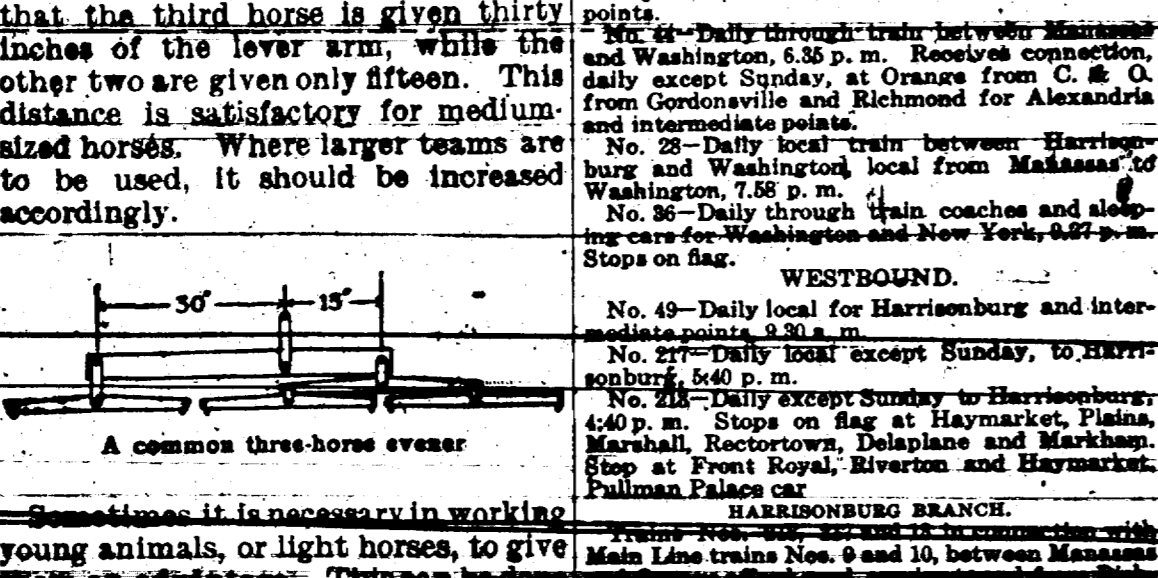

Centrifugal force is what causes separation in all cream separator bowls, but there are several conditions which may prevent the separator from working. The first separator bowls made were hollow and centrifugal force was required to set upon the milk. These bowls are necessary that these bowls be revolved at an excessively high rate of speed in order to obtain centrifugal force being sufficient to force the milk solids to the outer edge of the bowl. Furthermore, the results were uncertain because the bowls were not revolved at a high rate of speed, which means greater durability because it reduces the strain upon the operating mechanism.

THREE HORSE HITCHES

A Kansas correspondent writes: "In making a three-horse hitch for a disk, I would like to know where the hole should be bored. Should two-thirds of the effort be given to the single horse to make an even distribution of the pull, or should it be given to the outside of the single horse?"

The length of the hitch and also the length of the single horse will depend upon the size of the horses and also whether you desire working them close together or somewhat spread out. For summer work the horses will stand the heat a little better if given plenty of room. This is advisable in winter, too, as the horses will be more comfortable in a room that can be given and at the same time not hinder accomplishing the work satisfactorily.

Somehow it is necessary in working young animals, or light horses, to give them an advantage in pulling by increasing the length of the lever arm. There is no set rule for determining the amount of advantage to be given in the case of a three-horse hitch, but a simple way to use a number of holes and simply hitch the clevis until the small horse is able to carry the load the entire day without becoming more fatigued than the other horses. Some claim that the amount of lever arm or advantage given the small horse should be in proportion to the weight, but this is not always satisfactory because it is not taking into consideration the physical condition of the horses, which is the most important factor. However, to begin with, this method of adjustment does very well; other changes can be made as occasion requires.

Every farmer naturally wants a separator that is easy to use. By all means, a separator that is easy to use, operate, and many of them are not. Underneath for the purchaser this quality is often secured by building the machine light by sacrificing the capacity. In other words, the separator to buy a light, simply constructed separator simply because it is easy to use. Such separators will not stand up under the work for a long period to be a profitable investment.

Milk as it comes from the cow is one of the purest articles of food, but it is also very easily contaminated. From the separator bowl must be kept in a clean, sanitary condition. Don't judge a separator by the number of bushings it has. The more important is the construction of the parts. The separator should be kept clean, washed, and the corners are hard to get at and will often be improperly cleaned.

In selecting a separator do not be misled by the name. The name of the separator is not so important as the construction of the parts. The separator should be kept clean, washed, and the corners are hard to get at and will often be improperly cleaned.

It will pay you to deal at the Dependable Store, where you'll find Seasonable Merchandise at the very Lowest Prices, coupled with polite service. Your patronage solicited.
