The Manassas Bemserat,

HENRY C. STUART FOR GOVERNOR

Every indication points strongly to that high type of manhood and statesmanship; Henry C. Stuart, for the next Governor of Vir-Stuart that throughout all sections of Virginia by the press and mer of all shades of opinion he is regarded and accepted as the most important factor in the next gubernatorial contest. Here and there appear hints of what may happen in the event of his death or of his inability to make the campaign. Such suggestions are rather the father of selfish motives and should not for a moment be taken seriously by Mr. Stuart's friends, for in reality there is not a man in the State of any age more certain to be fit and vigorous and ready for political battle within the next few months than he. This is the information obtained from Wytheville, the home of his nativity and where he now is visiting. Mr. Stuart's physicians eries become too stale to be healthy aver that the operation he underwent in Richmond will result in making him more strong and vigorous than he has been for years.

tution has asserted itself triumphantly. He expects to go to his home, in Russell county, the latter part of next week, where he will remain for a period of needed rest. In political matters Mr. Stuart is sitting up and taking notice

The fact that his warm supporters were standing nobly by him dur reat satisfaction and encouragement to him

Mr. Stuart is in good spirits on the outlook and is a charter membe trusted to look after his interests that may be necessary to place will reduce to a minimum the chief danger arising from a single him in the position of the State's chief executive.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE WICKLIFFE

REPRESENTATIVE ROBERT C. WICKLIFFE met a tragic death at the North end of the long bridge at Washington, Tuesday morni The most temable theory is that he had bearded the train at Union Station to ride as far as the bridge with one or more of his brother "Knights of Columbus," knowing that the train slowed down at that point to get the signal to pass over the draw.

The theory further followed out is that Representative Wickliffe either jumped from the train coming in contact with some obstacle which laid bare a gash of two inches in length and fracturing his skull, or else having alighted from the train he was standing on the track and was struck by Southern passenger train No. 255, South-
