NOMINATION OF WOODROW WILSON

AFTER the elapse of over three score years and ten Virginia is about to add another one of her illustrious sons to the gallery of presidents.

Since the election of William Henry Harrison in 1840, no Virginian has ever appeared as a candidate in the presidential contest up to the time of the nomination of Woodrow Wilson. Tyler was the last son of the Old Dominion to take his place in the presidential line, his illustrious predecessors being the immortal Washington, the father of his country; Jefferson, the father of Democracy; Madison, the defender of liberty; Monroe, the father of the Monroe doctrine, which holds nations in check; and William Henry Harrison, soldier and statesman.

Now looms up Woodrow Wilson in the political firmament as the nominee of the Democratic party with every reason to believe that he will lead his legion of followers to overwhelming success at the polls in November.

Woodrow Wilson is imbued with that old Virginia Jeffersonian spirit: "The greater benefit for the greater number," and obedience to the will of the majority rather than the will of the bosses and of the money sharks of Wall street. Though a resident of New Jersey where he has made his principles of reform felt from centre to circumference of that commonwealth, to Virginia, however, he remains a native son, a worthy successor to the noble company which figured so prominently in the upbuilding of this grand and glorious nation. Already Mr. Wilson has distinguished himself as president of Princeton University, as Governor of the state of New Jersey, and as a master of political science. His monumental work, "A History of the American People," has placed him on the pinnacle of fame, not only among men of letters but among statesmen.

Woodrow Wilson is the only historian who has made plain the attitude of the Southern people of the ante-bellum days." was the declaration of a northern reviewer, for he, as a Virginian, knew by reason of his place of birth, the real heart of the South and spoke as one of authority.

Skilful politician, as is Chas. F. Murphy who led the New York delegation, the Tammany leader was in a quandary when telegrams from all sections of the great Empire State came pouring in upon him directing that the vote of New York be cast for Wilson he dared not violate the injunction. In all fairness to the New York delegation it is proper to state that Murphy did not hold the delegates in the hollow of his hand as it were—a mere machine to do only according to his bidding.

It was the withdrawal of Underwood and the throwing of his vote to Wilson which turned the tide that swelled into a mighty torrent that swept Wilson to the nomination by acclamation.

In the nomination of Gov. T. R. Marshall, Indiana, the convention has named a running mate for Mr. Wilson who will greatly strengthen the ticket. Of the same ancestry as the Marhsalls of Virginia, one of whom has distinguished himself as a statesman and a jurist, no better selection than he could have made.

The Democratic platform emanating from that peerless statesman, William Jennings Bryan whom, it may be truthfully said, dictated the nomination of Woodrow Wilson for the presidency, depicts with planks calculated to relieve the trying conditions which now exist.

The questions of tariff reform, demanding a tariff for revenue only; high cost of living; charging the iniquities of the situation to high tariff laws enacted and maintained by the Republican party and from trusts and commercial conspiracies forged and encouraged by such laws, and the anti-trust law, dealing a death blow to its iniquitous operations, are features of that brainy platform from which the poor man may expect to find relief from the fearful oppression that is making it the greatest of hardships to meet even a moderate requirement of himself and family. The Democratic party should thank God that in the nomination of Woodrow Wilson the light is beginning to dawn upon a once more prosperous people.

THAT MANASSAS HOSPITAL

We occasionally hear rumors that the proposed Manassas Hospital which has, so far, failed to materialize, is not dead but speechless.

It is to be hoped that it may soon be awakened from its "ground-hog slumber" and spring into new life for such institution along the proposed line of railroad, between Manassas and Washington, Wilson for the presidency. They are: "Because he is thoroughly equipped, mentally and morally by birth, training and experience; his conception of public service is true; his proposals are radical; he is constructive and effective; he is free, and he is a Democrat."

The columns of THE DEMOCRAT are always open for the furthering of any project for the benefit of Manassas and Prince William county.

The great jollification which is going on today at Sea Girt, the home of Woodrow Wilson, must make the other aspirants for the Democratic nomination green with envy. The Campaign committee in which the nominee will take a lively interest will discuss the scope necessary for the campaign work in case that Roosevelt prosecutes his third party movement.

OLD VIRGINIA NEVER DIE

In accordance with a resolution passed at a recent meeting of the Haymarket Agricultural Club at the home of C. A. Heineken, we publish below the popular old southern song as rendered on that occasion by Col. Edmund Berkeley.

HIDDEN MONEY

OLD VIRGINIA NEVER DIE
In Old Virginia in the afternoon,
We sweep the kitchen with a brand new broom.
And after we formed a ring,
And this is the song we used to sing:
Clear the kitchen, old folks, young folks,
Old Virginia never die.

A bull frog dressed in soldier's clothes,
Went out one day to shoot some crows.
The crows smelt the powder and flew away,
And the bull frog, he was mad all day.
Clear the kitchen, etc.

An old dead horse lay in the road,
And on his hip bone sat a toad;
He raised his voice to the woods around,
Hark from the tombe a doleful sound:
Clear the kitchen, etc.

A jay bird sat on a hickory limb,
He looked at me and I winked at him;
I up with a stool and hit him on the shin.
Said he, "Sir, I don't better not do that again."
Clear the kitchen, etc.

As I was coming down the new cut road
I met a terrapin and a toad,
And every time the toad would jump,
The terrapin dodged behind a stump.
Clear the kitchen, etc.

A little old man came riding by,
Said I, old man, your horse will die,
Well, if he dies, I'll tan his skin.
And if he lives, I'll ride him again.
Clear the kitchen, old folks, young folks,
Old Virginia never die.

HIDDEN MONEY

Statistics show that the percentage of money lost outside of banks is greater than that lost due to bank failures by over 240 per cent. And yet people will store their money away in stockings, bureau drawers, mattresses, carpets, etc., waiting for the thieves and flames. The stories of serious and pitiable losses of this kind published during the past year would fill a volume. They show that many murders have been caused by hidden money—in some cases for ridiculously small amounts.

WHY FARM DESERTED FOR LIFE IN CITY

CAUSE—LACK PROPER EDUCATION

Average Boy Takes More Interest in the Study of the Corn Root Than in the Study of the Greek or Latin Root.

The question is quite frequently asked, why so many half and hearty, energetic and promising young men are deserting the country environments and the independence of their fathers' farm and seeking city life. There are many causes that are responsible for bringing about such conditions but it is pretty generally conceded by students of the problem that our school system is mainly at fault for this exodus from the country.

In most of our rural high schools the subjects of study are almost entirely limited to matters and subjects foreign to true nature and the domestic and rural surroundings. Of course, many of these subjects are important and impart excellent mental discipline, but prominent educators now recognize the fact that subjects dealing with the fundamentals of agriculture are equally as important for mental training, and at the same time are much more interesting and helpful to the farmer's sons. It is now believed that the study of the laws of plant growth will train the mind just as effectively as the study of the Biomial theorem, and that the study of a corn root will give as valuable mental training as the study of a Greek or Latin root.

It is perfectly natural for the country boy to take a more lively interest in the study of the corn root than in the Greek or Latin root, and interest is the best method of appeal.

To meet this growing need in our secondary education system the General Assembly of Virginia, on March 14, 1908, passed an act providing for the building and maintenance of an Agricultural High School in each of the ten congressional districts, and in accordance therewith one of these schools was established in the Eighth Congressional District at Manassas. The building is a modern brick and stone structure, having eight large rooms and an office each for the Supt. of schools and the School director. Adjacent to the building there are twelve acres of land for experimental and demonstration purposes in teaching and promoting interest in agriculture. The value of this building, land and equipment is approximately $20,000, including the two acres of land upon which the building stands and which was donated by Dr. M. C. Bennett, of Washington, for whom the building was named.

The purpose of this school is to give the girls and boys an opportunity to equip themselves for their life-work, and to better fit them to solve life's difficult problems. Many rural schools adapt their whole course to the needs of the probably, one per cent of the pupils who go to college, but the agricultural high school is intended rather for the minority and nine who do not go to college. The course aims to give a general high school education with some specific and practical training in agricultural and household sciences. It is also the aim of the school where the agricultural subjects take the place of the higher mathematics and modern and dead languages that are ordinarily taught in the high school courses. In the third and fourth years the girls take a course in domestic science and domestic arts and manual training instead of the agricultural subjects.

The students have several organizations, such as a literary society, school improvement league, baseball and basketball teams. What the average boy or girl needs is an education which will prepare him for the farm as well as the city and not merely equip them for the automation of society with its means of providing for themselves a livelihood.

Never can a boy when you're made either or suffer a lot if he turns out to be a good person. Thousands of boys have turned out to be good persons. Thomas Jefferson Young drug store sells 25c and less.

AFTER FORTY YEARS VISITS OLD HOME

BEAN-EATERS ON FISHING TRIP

Gen. W. Payson, of Boston, Heads Party on Camping and Angling Expedition on Occoquan River Near Davis Ford.

What is considered the most attractive Fourth of July celebration ever held at the Charlottesville Summer Normal School was that of last Thursday, when the exercises, instead as formerly, taking the form of a pageant with elaborate preparations, entailing considerable trouble and expense, the committee in charge this year planned for a very simple ceremony. For the first time it was held indoors, in Cabell Hall, and partook of the nature of a general and an extremely informal jollification.

The north campus was early dotted with bright spots of color, as the delegates from the various states and colleges assembled.

Most of the delegations had adopted a costume of some simple type, and there were none of the complicated marchings and counter-marchings which have hitherto been such a feature of these celebrations.

With the Stonewall Band leading, the parading students entered the Lawn through the northeast arcade and spread out onto the three upper terraces. There a few maneuvers brought the delegation to a panoramic picture which was taken by Rufus W. Holsinger, formerly Manassas' chief photographic artist, and the parade then moved to Cabell Hall.

The third and final section of procession consisted of the teachers of the Old Dominion. Mrs. E. G. Moffett, former principal of the Manassas Graded School, was at its head with a great white banner, bearing the translation of the Greek motto, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

When Mrs. Moffett mounted the rostrum bearing the banner, with its motto in letters of emblazoned gold, she was given a great ovation and vociferously applauded as the "Mother of the Business School." Then this fluttered proudly the beautiful silk state flag given to the University by the Summer School of 1911.

The Virginians were all attired in white and wore diadems of gilt paper.

When THE DEMOCRAT'S representative called on Miss Lewis, Monday afternoon, he found her busy in getting ready for her trip. When asked if the memory of the tragic fate of the Titanic had dampened to any extent her enthusiasm on the eve of her departure, her face brightened as she replied in the negative and assured us that nothing of such nature would deter her from making the trip and that she would trust to Providence for an enjoyable tour and a safe return.

A number of Miss Lewis' lady friends were at the depot to see her off on her delightful trip and to wish her much pleasure.

BOYS.

Every boy is a miniature business man.

HELPING THE WOMEN

The cream separator is one of the things which especially appeal to the drudgery of the woman who has been cast on the farm. No better argument can be advanced for the use of such a machine than the fact that it can be easily attached to any machine. The man who places a separator on a farm has done something for humanity. In the city where a housewife has cooked the meal, washed the dishes and other wise cared for a little bit with running water, steam, heat, etc., the housewife may do ten times more work. Whereas, in the country a woman's work is never finished. Give the average farmer's wife only the housework to do and she would think she was on a vacation. It is this inequality of labor which starts country girls into the ranks of the working class.

There is no time when the woman is more useful than when she is working for the family.

We have just found that on a 160-acre farm, equipped with six splendid head of work stock, the average daily labor per horse was only a little over three hours for the entire year — a very small average labor record, indicating a great saving.

Well kept accounts would enable us to determine the most satisfactory way of utilizing our dairy products.

Experiment Stations have found that the cream separator reduces the loss of butter fat per cow to one-half.

It is the opinion of the experiment stations that the shallop cost and one-thirty-third of the water dilution methods of cream separation. This shows that with the ordinary farmer

who is milking ten average cows,

figuring butter at the market price,

will save more than the price of a separator.

It is recommended that the farmer who is in the market

for his milk, buy a separator.

It is the opinion of the experiment stations that the separator is the best investment for the farmer.
