Alumni Defeats Manassas High School in Annual Christmas Sunday School Exercises

The old graduates proved their superiority last Saturday night, when the Alumni of the old Manassas High School, including the schools of Trinity Episcopal Church, St. Mary's Church, South, Aurora M.E. Church, and the Baptist Church, have all been at work, and as part of the Christmas festivities, have been well attended and very interesting entertainments in connection assembled at each, and almost more than others, each school. The main event of the Sunday School program was held on Friday afternoon of Trinity Episcopal Church. The natural history, the human interest, the program consisting of the fourteenth of the members of the Sunday School, 100 of the choir, and the evening entertainment were well received. One of the two divisions of the children was the best part of the evening's entertainment. As usual, Miss M. S. Lippincott, Mrs. J. W. Lippincott, Mrs. and Miss M. L. Lippincott, the students from the High School were unable to make one part.

BILLBOARD AS A MUSANACE

Unnecessary and Inconspicuous, There M. Awareness and Existence

Black Art in West Africa

Critical and Incisively, the Billboard occupies a disturbing niche in the city's landscape. The sight of billboards, particularly those with advertisements for products and services, can be jarring. It is a constant reminder of the commercialization of public spaces, and it is easy to see how the billboard's presence can clash with the aesthetic of the urban environment.

In the midst of the hustle and bustle of city life, the billboard's visual impact is significant. The advertisements it features are designed to stand out, to attract the attention of passersby. Yet, when taken as a whole, the proliferation of billboards can create an overwhelming sense of commercialism.

Despite the potential for visual pollution, the billboard has become an inextricable part of the urban landscape. It is a testament to the power of advertising and the economy it supports. The billboard's presence is a reminder of the interplay between art, commerce, and public space.

Bend to the Curvatures of the River: An Angler's Perspective

An angler reflects on the challenges and rewards of fishing. The bend in the river, with its currents and eddies, presents a complex environment for the angler. The angler must be alert and prepared to respond to the ever-changing dynamics of the river.

Through the angler's eyes, we gain insight into the patience and perseverance required in the sport of fishing. The angler's experience is a reminder of the importance of preparation and adaptability in the face of change.

Penmanship

I have received a letter from a fellow angler, John Smith, who shared his experiences with me. He reported that while fishing near a particular bend in the river, he encountered unexpected conditions that made it difficult to cast his line effectively.

Smith recounted that as he was casting his line, the current shifted, causing his line to become tangled. This situation required him to think creatively and adapt to the changing conditions of the river. The exchange with Smith reinforced the importance of being prepared and adaptable in the sport of fishing.

The PARCEL POST AND THE FARM

In its annual report Postmaster-General Field says that while the "parcel post" department is doing its utmost to prevent the farmer from using it as a substitute for the express department instead of being an added burden, as is often said, it would be impossible to do so.

The farmer has derived great benefit from the innovation that has put him in close touch with the cities. It is stated that there has been a 50 per cent increase in parcel post business since it was started. The Postmaster-General, Mr. Field, has been in favor of the parcel post system, and has advocated the practice of the farmers taking advantage of the system to the best advantage.
