Other Speakers On Hand. Frank Lyon, State chairman of the anti-Smith group, will be present and will probably introduce Dr. Brown, while it is expected that J. Cloyd Byars, in active charge of the anti-organization group work for the Eighth Congressional District, who is campaigning the State in the interest of the Republican-anti-Smith candidate for governor, will speak.

John T. Cochran, of The Plains, grand master of Virginia Masons, will preside over the ceremonies.

To Be Largest Stone.

The granite memorial, which has been shipped from Vermont, will be the largest stone in the historic cemetery at Old Chapel, which contains the remains of many members of the oldest and most distinguished families of Virginia.

The old marble tombstone that stood at Randolph's grave for half a century has been preserved by imbedding it in the granite stone and covering it with heavy-beveled plate glass. In addition to prominent Masons from all sections of Virginia attending the dedicatory exercises, the committee has been advised that many from other parts of the country will be in attendance. The date selected is the anniversary of Randolph's death.

A number of the members of Manassah Lodge will attend this event.

COUNTY SCHOOLS OPEN DOORS TODAY

Children Radiate Sunshine As They Turn Steps Schoolward.

BRENTSVILLE HIGH HAS NEW BUILDING

Reports Indicate Record Attendance Throughout The County For First Semester.

Despite the overhanging clouds there was laughter and music in the air this morning as children with bright and shining faces hurried to the schools of Prince William County for the opening day of the first semester.

During the summer the schools were inspected by the superintendent and members of the school board with the result that many of them were freshened up with paint, both within and without, and other things were done to add to the comfort of the students who today filled the school rooms throughout the county.

While no figures were available today, it is understood that the 1929-30 enrollment is well in advance of that for last year and the opening day is said to promise a record year for school attendance in Prince William.

New School At Nokesville.

The Brentsville High School, at Nokesville, the building of which was completed during the summer, opened its doors for the first time today, and while no check on the number of pupils from the district was made it is believed that there was an attendance sufficient in number, it maintained throughout the year, to give this school the required number of pupils to get the necessary "credit" rating for a High School.

The new school has C. O. Bittle as principal, who comes here with twelve years' experience as a high school teacher, and the following staff of teachers:

Marjorie Graybill, Elizabeth Thomason, Grace L. Hite, Katherine Shumate, Lucy J. Hillman, Elizabeth Q. Morris, and J. P. Pullen; in charge of the vocational agricultural department of the Manassas High School, will have classes at Nokesville three days each week.

Senator Swanson will ask for an appropriation of $10,000 for the proposed monument. Mr. Bryan has offered a plot for the erection of the monument, and the Doly Madison Garden Club has offered to assist in beautifying its surroundings.

Historic Tavern Burned.

Suffolk, Sept. 4—One of Nansemond county's historic shrines, the Old Hargrove Tavern, located on the Suffolk-Fort Smith highway, near Driver, Va., was destroyed by fire which broke out Thursday morning and soon had the ancient building in a mass of flames.

The old tavern, sometimes called the "halfway" house was built in 1774 by William Hargrove, a great grandfather of A. S. Hargrove, who's home is not far from the tavern. For nearly a century this house, which was of the Colonial type, with a brick basement and two-story frame top, was the center of social life of "Lower Parish."

It was a tavern, a stopping place for the stage coaches, and an exchange for the mails.

Soldiers of the War of the Revolution, Colonial leaders and merchants of the early eighteenth century gathered here once each year. Under the great oaks which shaded the old tavern, a slave market was held. It remained in the Hargrove family until about 1924, when it was sold to its present owner, John Nelms.

It has been admired by hundreds of tourists passing from Norfolk to Suffolk, and a historical marker was placed near it.

The agency stated it was not at liberty to make public the identity of the theater corporation, saying only that the deal had been put through for Morton Thalheimer, Inc., real estate brokers, Richmond. The property, located between Sixth and Seventh Streets, has a frontage of 50.5 feet and runs through to Commerce Street.

Potomac Yard Bridge O. K.

Fairfax, Sept. 5—The bridge carrying the road between Washington and Alexandria, over the railroad tracks at Potomac yards, which was closed about ten days to be rebuilt, was opened August 27. The flooring of the bridge has been renewed where needed and it has been covered with an asphalt surface. Four steel traffic treads have been laid, over which traffic will move. This bridge, which is probably one of the most used in Virginia, is now stronger and in better condition than for many years.

IMPORTANCE OF GOOD SEED.

Good seed quality is one of the most important factors in crop production. This holds in vegetables, flowers and all small plants as well as among the major farm crops. Too often labor, fertilizers and other outlays are wasted on plants whose inheritance from inferior seed dooms them to failure before planting. As with livestock and poultry, so with plants. Good seed is security against many of the misfortunes that pursue the grower, the basis of success.

No crop is more responsive to proper seed selection than corn. Especially is this true of sweet corn. The quality of sweet corn depends largely on the hereditary sweetness that is brought to the crop through good seed and its protection from cross pollination from field corn. Not only is the sweetness lost through the use of poor seed, but the other qualities of the corn on which its palatability depends are derived from the seed, and missed when poor seed is used.

Corn belt farmers have realized the importance of good seed corn. Many not only aim at selecting the best corn they produce for seed, but often purchase specially bred corn each spring for the new crop. Growers are finding the production of pure bred corn a lucrative business, good seed of proved strains often selling for treble the prevailing market prices of corn.

Seed corn can not be selected alone on the appearance of the individual ear. General conditions of the field crop, health of the stalk and its relation to the surrounding stalks are necessary in judging the productive value of the ear for seed. An ear may possess all the qualifications needed in the perfect seed ear, but transmit to the next crop several disease tendencies because of a faulty and unhealthy stalk on which it was grown. Because of these factors, it is necessary that seed corn be selected from the standing stalk before the opportunities of judging the ear's health in its environment are lost.

Many growers are finding it profitable to search through the field of growing corn at this time of the year to determine the healthiest and best suited ears for seed. These stalks are marked and before the corn is cut, after the ears have properly matured, they are gathered and stored for the next year's seed. The advantages of selecting the seed before the stalks have fully ripened are found in the health of the leaves, freedom from root rot and the general appearance of the stalk and ear.

The largest stalks are, as a rule, to be avoided in seed corn selection. They often are the results of a specially fertilized spot or other surroundings of advantage. The stalk that has had equal competition with its neighboring stalks, produced a healthy, well-filled ear, situated at a medium height on the stalk, with no evidence of disease, offers the best source of safe seed.

Sweet corn seed selection, either for the home garden or where it is grown commercially, requires more care than choosing field corn seed. Sweetness and other qualities that constitute its eatable and marketable values are often lost through contamination with nearby field corn. Corn is not pollinated by bees and other insects as is found with most fruit crops. The pollen is carried by the wind from one stalk to another and from one field to another. This pollen is often transported for long distances. In keeping the sweet corn strain pure it is necessary that no field corn is grown near, especially on the side from which the prevailing winds blow.

Corn seed, either sweet corn or field corn, should be gathered from the standing stalk and stored in a dry, well ventilated place where the moisture from the ears may escape and the corn dry out before freezing weather arrives. Germination of corn seed usually is determined largely by the thoroughness or lack of proper drying out before low temperatures come. Freezing weather will do little damage to corn seed if the moisture content has been reduced to the minimum.

The ears should not be piled together during this drying process. Each ear should have free ventilation around it. This can best be obtained by hanging the ears by string or wire to the ceiling or rafters in an attic or similar storage place. The ears are thus protected from mice and rats by the same method.

Root rot, which is one of the most prevalent of corn diseases, is transmitted by seed. Investigations have shown that it is caused largely by improper soil conditions and can be avoided by restoring the soil to its natural proportions of plant food elements through proper fertilization and liming. An acid soil, lack of potash and phosphorus, and stunted corn are found together. While potash is not found in large quantities in the corn or stalk, yet it acts as a sort of traffic cop in the growing plant to keep the other food elements traveling to their appointed functions with the required regularity. This potash action is retarded in an acid soil. So it is important in selecting corn seed to see that these various requirements are present and that the ears have had sufficient cooperation from the soil for their maximum development.

The various rules for selection of seed corn apply equally as forcefully in choosing other vegetable and flower seeds. Too often growers give special attention to fertilization and cultivation of certain plants they intend to keep for seed. While this particular plant may be infested with many disease taints, yet the additional care will permit it to attain abnormal growth and lend it the appearance of attractive seed qualities. Far better is the selection of seed from a plant that has survived the competition of its neighbors and demonstrated its superiority by a healthy development and disease-free growth.

Where no proper appearing seed supply is available from any crop it is always a safe and profitable rule to abandon the plan of growing the next year's crop from home-grown seed. It is then advisable to purchase reliable seed next spring. Most states protect the purchaser. But in no case should seed be bought from sources of unknown origin. Money spent for the best seed procurable, though it may cost several times the market price, is always profitably and wisely spent. Efforts to determine the best quality of home-produced seeds from the growing plants are time well spent during September.

GETTING DOWN TO ISSUES.

If we are to believe reports from every section of the State—and they certainly carry the stamp of reliability—voters are looking more and more askance at such false issues as the coalition has been attempting to inject into the campaign in Virginia. They are tired of "Raskobism", "Du Pontism" and like political buncombe. They demand more solid food for thought. During the past few years they have tasted enough of good government to be hungry for a continuation of it, and they have little patience with fantastic issues, says the Times-Dispatch.

If the coalition really wishes to serve a high political purpose, it must not only localize its campaign, but it must give body to it. There is a painful hollowiness to the appeal of the Republicans and the anti-Smith faction. It is as the cry of a dying political party, having little hope of the future, but making a final desperate effort to live. The Republicans are not interested in "Raskobism", but they are willing to echo the shout of their brother anti-Smithites so long as that shout holds out the remotest promise of salvation. Nor is the purification of the Democratic party an undertaking to stir up enthusiasm among Republicans, but this political group follows the banner of Dr. Brown for such advantage as it offers. Similarly, the anti-Smithites, in view of their declarations, cannot team up wholeheartedly with the Republicans, for their allies frankly are in the fight to advance the Republican cause nationally. It is a strange spectacle—this fusion of widely divergent interests, each of them with a national flavor and touching very remotely the life of the State of Virginia.

Conceivably, a union of forces opposed to continued Democratic domination in Virginia might be for the best interests of the Commonwealth. Voters in this State are interested in party supremacy, but they are more deeply interested, we believe, in good government. Given two political programs, dealing only with local affairs, from which to choose, and they would give earnest consideration to each of them, with the single view of facilitating progress in Virginia. Apparently, however, they will not be privileged to make such a choice. The Republicans and anti-Smithites speak only of extraneous matters; they will not get down to purely State issues. Until, and unless, they do, they cannot expect much consideration from the thinking Virginia voter.

JAIL BOOK-BORROWERS.

Twenty-one citizens of Asheville have been summoned to court on the charge of having failed to return books borrowed from the public library. North Carolina has had a law for nearly 40 years under which it is made a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of $25 or 30 days in jail, to borrow a book from a public library and not return it within a specified time.

We are committed against the enactment of any more laws, but we promise to keep silent should the General Assembly of Virginia undertake seriously to consider the enactment of one providing fine or imprisonment—preferably the latter—for failure to return a book borrowed from a private library. Of course, enforcement of such a law would necessitate doubling, at least, the jail facilities of Virginia, but by the same token, justice would be more evenly dispensed through the state.—Petersburg Progress-Index.

STUDYING THE BREAD BASKET.

Plans to reduce the cost of living are easy to discuss, but as Mark Twain said, regarding talk about the weather, "We do nothing about it".

The Associated Grocery Manufacturers of America, comprising 230 leading manufacturers of grocery products, intend to do more than talk. They have embarked upon a world-wide investigation looking toward the reduction of distribution costs in their industry for the direct purpose of benefiting the consumer. Both President Hoover and Secretary of Commerce Lamont have voiced the unqualified opinion that reduced distribution costs were essential to continued expansion of American business.

H. R. Drackett, president of the Associated Grocery Manufacturers, points out that other nations are striving to attain a standard of living equal to that in America. A low price creates a larger volume of sales. If unnecessary distribution costs cause high prices in foreign as well as local markets, a reduction in these costs would result in lower prices to consumers and mean more consumers of American products.

The grocers are embarking upon a worthwhile movement which is in line with the modern tendency of mass production with a maximum turn-over at a minimum profit.

Press Comment

Peaceful For a Minute.

The Washington Post—On Monday the police commissioner of New York announced that gangsters had been driven from New York and that everything rested in peace, virtue and loveliness. Too bad that on Tuesday he had to announce the murder of three witnesses to a previous gang slaying.

No News Today!

N. E. A. Bulletin—A reporter in a neighboring town asked a woman if she could give him a news item. She thought and thought and finally admitted regretfully that she didn't know a "single solitary thing. I'm too excited to think, anyway," the woman added, "because my brother broke his arm when his house burned down this morning and I am on my way to see him."

Tut, Tut!

New Orleans Times-Picayune—Premier Ramsay MacDonald, who comes to Washington in October, will bring with him his daughter, Isobel, and we trust no question of precedent will be raised against the lady merely because she is the daughter and not the wife of our distinguished guest.

Here Too.

Toledo Blade—A Columbia professor says the vawn is a boon. Of course it is. Without it we could not hope to get through the 1929 baseball season.

Modern Literary Tastes.

Memphis Democrat—The grandchildren of those who in the old days discussed the Bible, Shakespeare, Dickens, Byron and Poe now are talking learnedly of Chevrolet, Ford, Nash, Whippet, Buick, Dodge and others.

Another Farm Problem.

St. Louis Post Dispatch—A farmer's wife in Bradford, Tenn., has given birth to three sets of twins within the last five years. Her husband has sent the following appeal to the Governor of Tennessee: "I haven't a farm and have just one cow. I have heard that anyone could get help from the government where they had three sets

The International Sunday School Lesson for September 8 is "Nehemiah Rebuilding the Wall of Jerusalem"—Nehemiah 2:1-7:4.

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

Here is a tale that makes the blood tingle and brings a sparkle to the eye. It is about a man of olden time who was all man—a hero, a patriot, a saint, a builder, a ruler, a diplomat. Sheer manhood rings in every line of the story. Bigness and bravery and sound sense show forth in each paragraph. The record is a deathless one, with a message for our own age. Would that every public official, before taking office, could spend a contemplative hour in solitude with the history of Nehemiah.

That first mark of essential greatness, concern for his country and for his people, shines forth from every glimpse of Nehemiah. He himself was safe, and in luxury. He held an honorable position in the court of the great king of Persia, at the palace of Shushan.

So why should he worry over the plight of the returned Jews in Jerusalem? Ah, but he had that quality of vicariousness which is the hallmark of all the world's servants and saviors. There could be neither peace nor comfort for him so long as his countrymen were suffering.

A Peep At a King.

That is why the report of Jerusalem's miseries sent Nehemiah saddened into the presence of the king. The query pertinently arises, "What sort of trouble casts a cloud over my countenance? Is it some personal disappointment, some petty grievance or irritation, some lack of goods or gold? Or is it a great concern for unselfish ends?" Here in a palace was a patriot weeping for the exiles of his nation!

Then we have a glimpse of Persia's king—and all the kings of Persia recorded in the Old Testament appear in a favorable light. Artaxerxes had a sympathetic eye for his servants. He saw Nehemiah's distress and put his own back under his cup-bearer's burden. The prompt and efficient friendliness of the king makes good reading, as he sped Nehemiah's journey to Jerusalem.

Without a Press Agent.

Never a word did Nehemiah say to anybody in Jerusalem concerning his plans. He set secretly to work to investigate conditions for himself, not sharing his project with officials, priests or public. How old-fashioned! Our modern way is entirely different. A large part of every newspaper's columns is taken up with announcements of what somebody says is going to be—the airplane flight that is going to beat all records; the exploration that is going to reveal wonders; the invention that is going to revolutionize mechanics; the university that is going to build a skyscraper; the temple that is going to surpass all the religious edifices of the old world; the movement that is going to sweep society. Nehemiah's good way was to say nothing until of twins. If there is any justice in anyone getting help, I sure need it."

Plaything.

Macon Telegraph—It would be sweet of Mr. Hoover if he would abolish poverty again just before, or by the time, the $200 infant auto hits the market. We'd like to have one of the dern things ourself.

Magician Needed.

Cincinnati Enquirer—Germany has passed a law against suicide. Trouble is it's so hard to bring a fellow to trial after suicide.

Where Man's Generosity Is Shown.

Kansas City Star—Nearly every husband desires to be reasonable, and will readily concede to his wife the right to drive from the back seat as long as the car is going in reverse.

Reservoir.

Philadelphia Inquirer—Four-year-old Georgia kid who drank a dozen bottles of soda pop before being discovered must be one of those baby tanks the Army makes such a fuss about.

Get Ready for the Big Row.

Cleveland News—Dr. L. W. Childs, chief of the health service in Cleveland schools, has let it be known that in examining young women who possess teachers' certificates and are applying for jobs, he is not going to rule against the girl who confesses enjoying an occasional nip or smoke.

he got the work going. He was a builder without a press agent.

Like every other man who really does things, he quickly uncovered opposition. Sanballat and Tobiah and Geshem, whose interest, and that of their related families and followers, were not served by a prosperous and strong Jerusalem, quickly tried to bluff Nehemiah into giving up his project. But they could not succeed. Then they tried, five times, to get him to go down to the Plain of Ono, near Jaffa, for a conference, on their own ground. But he was too busy to talk. Would that all the churchmen and social workers who spend a large share of their time galling around the earth—on expense accounts—to hold conferences, could give heed to Nehemiah's example. I have heard only one sermon and that was by Moody, on the text which tells this wise builder's reply to the invitation to go to Ono:—"I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down: Why should the work cease, whilst I leave it, and come down to you?" It is wise to beware of Ono.

What About Enemies?

Some folks have no enemies. But they have nothing else, and do nothing. Anybody who is afraid of what people will say about him is not called to do the Lord's work. He will build no walls of Zion. Some timid spirits shrivel up, and give themselves to wallowing about persecution, whenever they encounter opposition. The sensible way is to expect foes; but to make sure that they are not foes on account of any mean personal traits or actions of our own; but because of our good work and sound views. And the way to meet them is to go right on working. He who, less wise than Nehemiah, stops to squabble, is done for.

In Nehemiah's case, he had to arm his workers; they built with their weapons by their side, ready to fight or to toil. I fear that this is no lesson in pacifism. To these Jews, restoring the wall of their capital, there were some things worth fighting for as well as worth working for. They were not belligerent, but they were brave and prepared.

Our Own City Perils.

Leering at us across the edges of this Lesson, is the whole problem of the modern city. Sanballat and Tobiah and Geshem and their cohorts were no more real to Nehemiah than are the gunmen, the grafters, the perfidious politicians and other criminals who threaten the very existence of our urban civilization. Since the war, the underworld has openly challenged the sovereignty of good citizenship in the great metropolitan areas. Chicago and New York and Philadelphia almost confess failure. The walls that safe-guard the city are down, and where is the Nehemiah to rebuild them?

It is vain to study about Nehemiah's work in the restoration of old Jerusalem unless we are willing to carry the Scripture to its logical conclusion in our own community. And unless this Lesson develops doers, of the Nehemiah breed, it will be wasted.

Over Against His Own House.

Aside from his own leadership, which was really great and tireless and unselfish and brave, Nehemiah's resource was the assigning of work in limited portions to each group opposite its own dwellings or interest. Nobody, except the leader, had responsibility for meeting the whole problem. Each simply had to build over against his own house. And a deathless roll was made of those who rallied to the work—with permanent shame for such, like the nobles of Tekoa, "who put their necks to the work of the Lord". As if in humiliation over this recreancy of their nobles, the men of Tekoa took on a double stint of work.

For men of today, the point of the Lesson is to build the civic walls over against where they themselves live. That is, see that one's own neighborhood is free from vice and graft, and that elections are clean and that voters vote and that public officials do their duty. This is no trivial or temporary task. It calls for that "eternal vigilance" which "is the price of liberty". It means doughty conflict with public foes. It means back-breaking toil, as in the case of old Jerusalem, in the carrying off of the accumulated rubbish of previous neglect and defeat. But there is no other way of making the city safe and strong. May I again quote William Blake's lines, adapted:—

"I will not cease from mental fight
Nor shall my sword sleep in my hand,
Till we have built Jerusalem,
In this our green and pleasant land."

A CHUCKLE OR TWO

Advertising Pays.

Devilbiss—My largest item of expense is on account of advertising. Refuniak—Indeed! I was not aware that you were in business.

Devilbiss—I'm not. But my wife reads the ads in the newspapers.

Salesman Puzzled.

A lady who had married a traveling salesman decided to raise chickens. When her husband returned from his trip he asked her how her chickens were doing.

With pride she answered: "Fine! I have five hens and two roosters."

The salesman was puzzled.

"I don't understand why you have two roosters with only five hens."

"Well," his wife explained, "I got an extra one in case the other took a notion to go on the road."

Use a Club.

Husband (testily, after going down badly at bridge)—You might have guessed I had no heart.

Wife—Quite; but I thought you had a brain, darling.—Tit-Bits.

Mr. Hardfax—Yes! If you keep on this way you stand a chance of being a fairly good looking old woman.

Fifty-Fifty.

The well-known Irish comedian, Talbot Farrell, tells the story of a typical "bull" perpetrated by one of his countrymen.

A small touring company was playing to rather meager audiences in a remote Irish town, and the manager, wishing to find out how the attendance at his show compared with the attendances at others, asked one of the local inhabitants how the theater was usually patronized.

"Oh, not so bad, not so bad," was the reply. "Sometimes it's half full, and sometimes it's half empty."—Pearson's Weekly.

Only A Dozen Bananas.

Robert made his first week-end trip alone to visit his aunt in a nearby town. The aunt was aroused in the night on the day of his arrival by a very sick boy.

Observing symptoms of an overloaded stomach, she said:

"Robert, did you buy any trash and eat it on the train coming out?"

"No, auntie, I didn't have a thing except a dozen bananas," replied the distressed lad.

She Knew Something.

Betty was playing in the yard with her wagon. Her mother happened by, stooped and kissed her. Quickly she wiped the kiss off. "Don't kiss me, mamma," she said, "I'm the garbage man."—Christian Herald.

Poor Little Mammal.

Conductor—"You can't take that dog into the train; you'll have to put him in the baggage car."

Miss Hurst—"This isn't a dog; this is a mammal."

Conductor—"Well—all right—take him in; but he looks a lot like a dog to me."

Blaze a Trail to Success Without Your "Adz" in the Press

Meeting a customer face to face was in the past considered the only means of selling goods. Today 75 per cent of all merchandise is sold in the home through constant and intelligent advertising.

The merchant who thinks his opportunity would be greater elsewhere is of a mediocre caliber and uses his wishbone in place of his backbone, forgetting that opportunity does not help the man unless he seizes it.

Every town with a newspaper affords the greater and golden opportunity, and millions of dollars are made by this valuable ever-present medium.

Newspaper advertising has many advantages over personal selling. One is suggestive description, creating the desire in the mind of the reader, which had not occurred to him before.

Another advantage is: your appeal is made oftener, when the reader's mind is in the most receptive mood; in the warm and cheerful home, or on the cool and shady porch. The paper is a welcome visitor, bringing the latest local news of social and business interest. The local merchant has social and personal advantage over the mail-order house in addition to a daily or weekly intercourse and contact through his paper.

Authentic statistics show that many communities have successfully combated this undesirable and unnecessary loss of business by co-operating with a consistent method of merchandising, back of truthful and persistent use of the already existing opportunity offered by the catalog menace.

Life is too short for the average buyer to roam abroad investigating and comparing values, when it can be done in a rocking chair. Therefore sharpen your "adz" and blaze a trail to success.

REPUBLICAN LEADERS DISCUSS VIRGINIA

Consider Ways And Means of Accomplishing Defeat of John Garland Pollard.

Virginia Republican Leaders gathered in Washington last week to discuss ways and means of accomplishing the defeat of John Garland Pollard Democratic nominee for governor, in the approaching November election.

The conference was behind closed doors, in the privacy of one of the dining rooms of the Metropolitan Club and the press was not represented. After the dinner conference ended it was announced that every conferee was confident that the situation in Virginia promised success for the Republican anti-Smith coalition, and so expressed himself at the conference.

C. Bascom Sloop, national committeeman, called the conference which was attended by Col. Henry W. Anderson, Congressman Shaffer, Garber and Lankford. R. O. Crockett, of Tazewell, and Duncan Curry, of Staunton, vice chairman of the state committee. No representative of the anti-Smith Democrats was present.

One of the features of the conference was a post-mortem on the Democratic primary, in which Pollard was nominated over G. Walter Mapp. The gist of the analysis was this: Pollard polled nearly all the "regular" or Byrd strength, while approximately 35,000 former Mapp supporters remained out of the primary, in order to vote against Pollard. It was also held by leaders attending the conference that some thousands of persons who voted for Mapp in the primary this month would not vote for Pollard in November. It was the prevailing opinion that Pollard could not count upon more than 125,000 votes in the regular election.

Gives Brown 25,000 Majority.

Assuming the correctness of this estimate of the vote that Pollard will get the Republican argument, as reflected at Washington, is that all that is necessary to insure a coalition victory is to get the polls in excess of 125,000 Republicans and anti-Smith Democrats.

Congressman Garber was inclined to forecast a total vote in November of about 275,000, and was of the opinion that Pollard would be defeated by 25,000 in a vote of that size. He gave the Democratic nominee 125,000 and William Moseley Brown, the coalition nominee, 150,000.

In the presidential election last year Virginia cast a total of more than 300,000.
