

DO NOT DELAY IN CANCER

Many Lives Could Be Saved If Prompt Attention Were Given Dreaded Disease.

[The Scientific American]

Thousands of lives now needlessly sacrificed to cancer could be saved if the patient would go to the surgeon as promptly as does the average person attacked by appendicitis.

Unfortunately, the evidence is only too clear that a different attitude toward cancer prevails and occasions many preventable deaths.

Proof of this fatal neglect is found in the experience of a prominent surgeon who recently studied his case records in order to obtain definite information as to the delay in the average case.

Winter, of Koenigsberg, Prussia, the pioneer in the education of the public in regard to cancer, examined the records of 1,062 operable cases and showed that 87 per cent. of these patients could and should have applied for treatment much earlier.

To the delay when the symptoms are manifest must be added the previous indefinite period after the beginning of the disease and before the patient realizes the trouble.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY NEW TRADE MARK

The Southern Railway Company has adopted a new and attractive trade mark as shown above. The design "SR" is symbolical of the name of the road and the wording, "The Southern Serves the South," is suggestive of the many lines operated by the Southern Railway throughout all of the states south of the Ohio and Potomac and east of the Mississippi rivers.

Southern Railway spends about $200,000.00 a year in advertising and a great deal of this advertising is done in the Northern, Eastern and Western sections of the country so as to attract people into the South.

SHELTER THE IMPLEMENTS

Depreciation the Biggest Expense Connected With Nearly All Farm Implements.

[The Progressive Farmer]

The breaking plows, the harrows, the planters and many other implements used about the farm have largely finished their work for this season.

Depreciation is the biggest expense connected with nearly all farm implements, and the wise farmer will see that it is held down to a minimum. We have known farmers who have used grain binders ten or a dozen years and that are still in good condition.

Nor is this all. We have seen high-priced threshing machines, mowers and rakes, breaking plows, in fact, every kind of implement used about the farm, lying out, season after season, with apparently never a thought given to the hard dollars they cost.

CONCERNING WOMEN

Women have entered few American legislatures but woman is in them all. Every year the lawmaker is called on to make new rules concerning mothers' "pensions," the wife's property rights, divorce, hours of labor for women, and the rights of school teachers.

During the winter and spring just past suffrage was discussed as an issue in twenty-seven legislatures. In seven cases it was referred to the people for decision. In four of these states—Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York and Massachusetts—the fight at the polls will take place this year.

Farm Women's Work Easier.

Some women there are who crave the city life. Let them live it. To others the country makes the stronger appeal. They love its breath, its quiet, its simplicity, its wholesomeness, its unquestionably better environment for children.

MANASSAS, VA., FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 1915.

ARE WE WILLING TO PAY THE PRICE?

If we are going to be helped we must first help ourselves. If Manassas is to grow and develop along substantial, constructive lines its business men must exercise that intensive energy and acumen that inevitably leads to success in the building up of any town which enjoys great natural advantages. There is no reason why the county seat of Prince William can not hope for great things provided the business men of the town work cooperatively. On the other hand we can never hope that Manassas will take on healthy growth if the citizens of the town are indifferent in the matter. Other progressive towns of Northern Virginia and of Maryland are awake to their opportunities and the business men of these towns are only too glad to pay the price of town development. Are we of Manassas willing to pay the price?

On Tuesday evening a small but representative body of business men of Manassas met in Conner's Opera House and discussed the reviving of interest in the Manassas Business League. All who were present were heartily in favor of waging an extensive campaign for the promotion of Manassas' interests. But this can only be done when two conditions are met, i. e., when the business men and all others interested in the town's welfare sacrifice a little of their personal time to attend meetings of the business league and then to be willing to pay their dues to the organization and at times to serve as active committeemen. On next Tuesday evening at eight o'clock another meeting of the business men will be held in Conner's Opera House. It is your duty, and it should be your privilege to attend this meeting.

The Manassas Business League can be made an organization of great good to our town. It has before it a great amount of work and if given the funds can do more for the town along the lines of development than any other one group of its citizens. An opportunity now awaits the grasping. Manassas has more to offer the home and investment seeker and the man who wishes to start a factory, a cannery or many another business enterprise than it ever had in its past history. Manassas is blessed in so many ways that it would be futile to attempt an enumeration of its many advantages in this limited space but with our efficient, modern improvements, our reasonable tax rate and our fine geographical location we have a combination that is hard to beat. These advantages in themselves have a tendency towards inducing growth but the zeal of rival towns can, in many instances, draw to themselves what would be ours if we only would work for it.

Now this is a question for the business men of Manassas to decide: Taking into account the amount of knowledge which is quite generally possessed by business men, are these men of Manassas making a practical application of what they know ought to be done for the town's growth and prosperity? Do these men to whom the future of Manassas is really a vital matter wish to have an effective organization which will look after the town's rightful place among other towns? If they do the opportunity of ensuring a live business league now awaits them. If they do not care one way or another the business league will rapidly fall back into its old slumber and Manassas will be assured of that peaceful quietness which permeates too many Southern towns already. Men of Manassas, arise and support a live business league. Our town has such a progressive, clean-cut look about it that it seems a pity not to push its advantages more.

It's not how much talking you do that counts; unless you are informed and stick to your subject people will pay very little attention to your friv-

A FINE HEALTH RECORD

The report of the health officer of Manassas for year ending September 1, 1915, as is given in another column, is one which the citizens of the town should review with care and pride. The record of the past year is a good one and no citizen of the town should hesitate to recommend Manassas as a place where good health is to be found.

As can be seen by looking at the report the deaths recorded within the corporate limits from all causes numbered twelve during the past year, less than one death for every one hundred inhabitants. This is a low death rate. Another gratifying fact brought out in the report is that there was only one death of a person under one year of age and only two deaths of persons between one and ten years of age. A low infant mortality rate is something coveted by all towns and cities. Our record in this particular is fine.

It is to be regretted, on the other hand, that three of our citizens during the past year lost their lives by typhoid fever, that preventable disease which man must fight by strict sanitation at all times if he is to make sure of stamping it out. These cases arose from sources other than the town's present water supply: which goes to show that a pure water supply as a health investment is unequalled. Upon analysis the town water has repeatedly been proclaimed pure and free from germs. It is hoped that another year will find the slate clean of deaths charged up to preventable diseases.

The birth rate for the town is seen to keep well ahead of the death rate; we may soon expect a visit from Colonel Teddy, that ardent fighter against race suicide. Another feature of the report attracts our attention, i. e., the low death rate among our colored people. We hear a great deal about the colored man's decline and the heavy death rate among the race in the towns and cities, but from the report the colored people of Manassas enjoy equally as good health as the whites. Altogether the report is very gratifying. Of course, it could be better and we must not rest content until we have made it so.

THE PRESIDENT'S VICTORY

What has seemed impossible to many a citizen of this country has been accomplished by that cool, intelligent man of the White House, whom we, a nation of peace lovers, learn to admire more and more as these trying days of strained diplomatic relationships go by. Where in the history of the United States has there been a more difficult and trying problem than the one which has arisen over the direct violation of international law by German submarines? Where have we record of a wiser and firmer handling of a critical situation than the one in which President Wilson has just come out victor?

The whole nation rejoices with the President, the Secretary of State and official Washington in the signal victory which the administration has won over the recent defiant attitude of Germany towards this country. As to the details they can doubtless be arranged without difficulty. What Wilson has aimed at all along has been the bringing of Germany to our point of view. Germany accepts our view when she promises through her ambassador that "liners will not be sunk by our submarines without warning and without safety of the lives of noncombatants, provided that the liners do not try to escape or offer resistance." Germany thus bows to Wilson; ought we not bow to the same man?

LABOR HOLDS SWAY ON MONDAY

Labor Day, the day when the laboring man does not labor, but parades and shows his relative strength and importance to society, will be celebrated next Monday. It is well that one day is set aside each year on which labor can frolic and enjoy itself to its heart's content. No man is more deserving of a holiday than the laborer and no man more thoroughly enters into the spirit of recreation thus afforded. With all the advance in science and the many labor-saving devices, the laboring man is still an absolute necessity, the most vital factor in all constructive operations. Monday is his and we wish him much pleasure for the day.

Big and black is the cloud overhanging the horizon of the schoolboy. On Wednesday, September 15, it is due to descend with all its fury upon Manassas.

Mrs. R. A. Hutchison Hostess To Bethlehem Good Housekeepers' Club Last Week.

Miss E. Lay Hodge, Secretary Bethlehem Good Housekeepers' Club

The Bethlehem Good Housekeepers' Club met at the home of Mrs. Robert A. Hutchison on Saturday afternoon last, August 28th. For various reasons the time of meeting had been advanced from the third to the fourth Saturday of the month.

Notwithstanding the unpropitious weather of the afternoon there was a large attendance. Coming from the rain without to the brightness within afforded a pleasant contrast. A cup of cocoa was much appreciated by the members until the president called the meeting to order.

The roll call was responded to by appropriate quotations and the minutes were approved, after which Mrs. Hutchison introduced the subject for the afternoon, "Canning."

Miss Emily Johnson, county demonstration agent, led an animated discussion and gave us many useful hints on the subject. Square cans, which do not seem to be obtainable here, were highly recommended. They are easily packed and the fruit seems to appear better in them.

The rules and regulations in regard to the approaching exhibition were read and discussed. By the present plan the difficulties will be much lessened. The following was read and by order of the club it is incorporated in this report:

"To the woman's home demonstration clubs the American National Bank of Richmond, Va., offers for the best collection of labor-saving devices, not to exceed five in number, a first prize of $15.00 and a second prize of $10.00. J. B. Wilkins and Bro. offer for best selection of menus for three meals 25 three-year-old apple trees." The business of the meeting having been disposed of the members were served delicious ice cream and cake. After a vote of thanks to the hostess and the united singing of "Auld Lang Syne," the meeting adjourned to meet on the third Saturday in September.

The Revolutionary War

BY WALTER S. SMOOT (Copyrighted 1915 by Walter S. Smoot—All Rights Reserved) PART VI. THE INVASION OF BURGOWNE

On the 27th of December, 1776, Washington received the encouraging news that part of the forces of Count Donop, another Hessian leader who had been stationed at Burlington, a short distance from Trenton, had retreated with their leader in all haste to Brunswick while the remainder had gone to Princeton.

When news that his veteran Hessians had fled before an attack of an army which he had deemed defeated and practically disbanded, reached Lord Howe, he was astounded.

Anticipating an immediate attack, Washington disposed his army, which now numbered about 6,000 men, at a favorable position on the Assunpink creek. As Cornwallis proceeded, on the 2nd of January 1777, he was so harassed by advance forces of the Americans that he did not reach Trenton until about sunset.

But he did not reckon on the strategy of Washington. That night a council of war was held to consider what was best to be done at this crisis.

Knowing that the main division of the British forces was with Cornwallis and that Brunswick and Princeton, where the British stores were kept, could be but imperfectly guarded, the Commander in Chief proposed his plan "one of the boldest and best conceived of the whole war."

About midnight, having successfully deceived Cornwallis by means of small parties left behind to keep the camp-fires burning and otherwise create the impression that they were encamped, the Americans took up their march toward Princeton.

Their unfamiliarity with the country so greatly impeded the march of the Americans, that at sunrise on January 3, they were still three miles from Princeton. Washington formed his army into two divisions; one under General Mercer was to destroy the bridge in order to prevent the approach of Cornwallis; the other under Washington, himself, was to press on with all haste to the town.

Washington then marched into Princeton with but little opposition; the garrison, three hundred in number, surrendered themselves prisoners of war. Washington was now anxious to push on to Brunswick and seize the British stores left there but when he saw the exhausted state of his troops who had marched practically all night and fought far into the morning, he decided that he could not do this without danger of being overtaken; so he retreated to Morristown where he took up winter quarters, thus relieving the fears of Cornwallis who, informed by the booming of cannon that Washington was at Princeton, had though impeded greatly by obstacles thrown in his path by the Americans, marched to save his stores at Brunswick.

Meanwhile, events in the North had moved swiftly. The American army which had been driven out of Canada rested first at Crown Point and then at Ticonderoga. Sir Guy Carleton, following close behind, had conceived a plan which he hoped would speedily end the war and secure for himself a share of the honors; viz., by securing the command of Lakes Champlain and George he would subdue all of northern New York; then he would push on to Albany and take up his winter quarters; from that point he would cooperate with the British army in New York and cut off all communication between New England and the States west and south.

But the Americans had no intention of having the command of the lake thus easily taken away from them. General Gates authorized Arnold to fit out a flotilla with which to intercept and destroy, if possible, Carleton's fleet. With his accustomed fire and energy, Arnold threw himself into the enterprise and soon assembled a fleet half as large as that of Carleton.

Having stationed himself in a narrow inlet of the lake, he waited impatiently for the attack. Carleton, bearing briskly down the lake under full sail, passed the inlet before he observed Arnold's fleet. As the swift current prevented his larger vessels from advancing up the lake, he sent his smaller vessels to attack the Americans. After a desperate encounter, the British were driven back. That night under cover of the darkness, Arnold slipped away and by morning was well on his way toward Crown Point. But the slowness of Arnold's vessels enabled Carleton to overtake him. A desperate battle ensued during which some of the American vessels were captured and some sunk; seeing that he could not hold out against the British, Arnold set fire to his ship, got his men off safely and joined Gates at Ticonderoga.

But by spring the commanders of the British army in the north had been changed. Sir Guy Carleton was superseded by Gen. John Burgoyne who, with a force of British, Canadians, Hessians, and Indians numbering in all some ten thousand men, advanced from Canada on Fort Ticonderoga. By dragging his cannon up on the summit of a hill which commanded the fort, Burgoyne compelled the American commander, General St. Clair, to evacuate Ticonderoga in all haste and retreat toward the Hudson. Such was the haste in which the Americans retreated that they were compelled to abandon much of their stores. Even at prisoners; St. Clair did not stop until he had joined Schuyler at Fort Edward. Schuyler later retreated to Saratoga.

The loss of the Americans in this disastrous retreat had been enormous and a great wave of depression swept over the country. Not understanding the difficulties under which Schuyler labored, Congress attributed the result to his incompetency and removed him from the command of the Army of the North; in his place was appointed General Gates, to that general's great self-satisfaction.

August 3, 1777, General St. Leger with a force of British regulars, Indians and Tories, passed up the Oswego and besieged Fort Stanwix. General Herkimer raised a body of the local yeomanry and went to the relief of the fort, but fell into an ambush, was himself mortally wounded and his men compelled to retreat. But Arnold, by spreading the most exaggerated reports of the strength of his own forces and of the defeat of Burgoyne, caused the Indians to desert in great numbers which so weakened St. Leger that he was compelled to hastily retreat.

The supplies of the British now began to run low for so effectively had Schuyler secured all means of transportation to his army that the British found it almost impossible to transport them from their base of supplies. To seize some stores which had been collected at Bennington, Vt., Burgoyne sent out an expedition composed of Indians, Tories, and five hundred Hessians, under Lieutenant-Colonel Baum.

When it was noised abroad that Burgoyne had sent out this expedition, the patriotic yeomanry of the country began to rise. A considerable force was soon assembled. Colonel John Stark joyfully accepted an invitation to lead the company against the British. Baum advanced slowly upon Bennington; toward evening on August 16, 1777, when he heard of the approach of Stark he halted and threw up intrenchments. At sunrise the next day, Stark advanced. When he came in sight of the British he exclaimed: "There are the redcoats! We must beat today or Molly Stark's a widow." The Americans prosecuted the fight with so much vigor that the Indians and Tories fled precipitately to the woods. Colonel Baum defended his lines with so much energy and determination that it was found necessary to storm his works. In the assault he himself was mortally wounded; his men then surrendered. As a result of this victory, six hundred prisoners, one thousand stand of arms and four pieces of artillery fell into the hands of the patriots.

The circumstances of the Americans had now greatly improved. Their army numbered 6,000 men and was increasing daily. On the other hand the army of Burgoyne was being daily depleted by battle, disease and desertion; the American troops were pressing onward to cut off the supplies he so sorely needed and, also, his communications with Canada. This was the situation when Gates arrived and superseded Schuyler in the command.

Gates now moved up the river and took up position at Bemus' Heights where he intrenched and threw up strong batteries. The army was separated into two divisions—the right wing under the command of Gates himself; the left under Arnold.

Burgoyne now threw a pontoon bridge across the Hudson and marched across the English portion of his army. This force, marching slowly down the river, came into collision with Arnold's division. A hard-fought battle ensued and, though the result was indecisive, Burgoyne lost men and munitions of war which he could ill afford to spare.

Two days before this battle, by securing the command of Lake George, the Americans cut off Burgoyne's intercourse with Canada and seized a large fleet of bateaux filled with supplies which he solely needed.

Burgoyne was now in desperate straits. His provisions were rapidly diminishing and his horses were dying for want of forage. Inspired by a dispatch from Sir Henry Clinton saying that he would soon be able to ascend the Hudson, Burgoyne determined to make a last stand and, on October 7, 1777, joined with the Americans in a general engagement.

Because of jealousy, Gates had unjustly removed Arnold from his command and that aggrieved officer was sitting in his tent brooding over his misfortunes when the battle broke out. His fiery nature could not resist the sound of the cannon and he rushed out of his tent, rejoined his division and, fighting "like a demon" led on his men to the charge. By his exertions the British were routed again and again but each time the efforts of their commander, General Fraser, prevailed upon them to rally. At last Fraser was mortally wounded by a sharpshooter; the whole British line broke and by the greatest exertions regained their camp. That night Burgoyne made a feeble attempt at flight but was overtaken by the Americans near Saratoga. He now gave up his cause as lost, opened negotiations with Gates, and on October 13, 1777, his entire army numbering 6,000 men laid down their arms and became prisoners of war.

The success achieved by the patriots during this period had exceeded their most sanguine expectations. The flame of hope, already revived by the successes at Trenton and Princeton, was now, as a result of the surrender of Burgoyne at Saratoga, burning brightly. England's ancient enemies, France and Spain, rejoiced and began to think seriously of taking up arms in behalf of the colonists who were prosecuting their fight for freedom so successfully.

Establishment by the government of a university at Washington, to be supported at a cost of $10,000,000 a year, to teach young men and women from all parts of the world "a doctrine of right and brotherly love" was suggested as a short cut to world peace by Philander C. Figures made public last week by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce show that American exports in the fiscal year ended June 30 last totaled $2,768,600,000, compared with $2,170,100,000 for the United Kingdom. The Secretary of War has invited American sculptors of established reputation to submit designs, in competition, for "a monument in memory of Francis Scott Key, author of the 'Star Spangled Banner,' and the soldiers and sailors who participated in the battle of North Point and the attack on Fort Mchenry in the war of 1812." An act of Congress approved July 29, 1914, appropriated $75,000 for the erection of the Key memorial at Fort Mchenry, Baltimore, and charged the Secretary of War with the execution of the act.

Believing that the farmers of the State are the ones to get game protective laws through the General Assembly, M. D. Hart, president of the Audubon Society of Virginia, will throw the weight of his organization behind the bill to be offered at the next session by the Farmers' Union. "I am convinced," said Mr. Hart recently, "that the country people are the ones to get a game law through the Legislature. It will be the first time in the history of the State that the farmers have ever asked the Legislature to give them laws to conserve the wild life of the State, and I can see no reason why the General Assembly should even consider game laws sought by city associations in preference to those wanted by the farmers."
