"MIND YOUR OWN BUSINESS" PEOPLE

Popular ideals change. Years ago it was thought to be very much to a man's credit, to say that he was disposed to mind his own business. If he paid his debts, obeyed the laws, and attended strictly to his own business, he was considered an ideal citizen.

But people began to realize that that type of personality did not develop a fine community. People were so busy looking after their own affairs that they paid no attention to public matters. They did not see to it that their cities developed in the best way. The interests of large elements of population were neglected. Towns grew up with unsatisfactory schools, or parks or playgrounds, poorly built homes and blocks.

Everybody minded his own business, but nobody looked after the community business. So many years ago there developed community movements, which sought to persuade people to devote a little of the time they had spent so assiduously in minding their own business, in looking after their common interests. Pioneers in this movement were considered to be "butting in." They were told they would better stay at home and look after their own affairs. Women who worked for better schools and playgrounds, were urged to go home and bake bread and look after the children.

But these movements have gotten great results. A new ideal of personality has developed. The new type of good citizen not merely minds his own business, but feels that the community's business must be attended to also.

Something of the same principle is developing in international relations. Many people say the United States should mind its own business and let the rest of the world severely alone. But the United States can no more lock itself up in its own boundaries and refuse to take an interest in world affairs, than the business man can shut himself in his shop and refuse to have anything to do with community movements.—Culpeper Exponent.

DANGEROUS CONFUSION

The conflict between recent public statements relative to available road funds is more apparent than real, but it is not less likely for this reason to create harmful confusion in the public mind.

To say that the peach trees are blooming vigorously is not to answer a prediction of short crops in cotton or tobacco. Nevertheless when peach blossoms are reduced to formidable tabulations and cotton and tobacco to dollar signs, decimal points and percentages, the average man is rather likely to experience some difficulty in placing his finger on the discrepancy. Most of us are just a little overawed by elaborate mathematical calculations, and when our mathematical experts fall into seeming disagreement our impulse is to make a gesture of helplessness and "forget it."

It is highly important that there should be no such loss of interest in this case. When the State Highway Department and the Virginia Good Roads Association mention $5,000,000, or approximately that sum, and the State Auditor insists upon $12,000,000, the apparently contending calculators are really not contending at all, not answering each other at all; they are simply talking about different things. Allowing for relatively trifling items, each side probably would admit that the other is right—though there is a difference of $7,000,000 between their figures. One is trying to show that cotton and tobacco will be scarce; the other energetically insisting that the outlook for peaches is great.

It has been asserted by the Highway Department and the Good Roads Association that approximately $5,000,000, certainly not more, will be available for new contracts on the State highway system during 1922. This estimate possesses the distinct advantage of dealing with the phase of the road subject that has been engaging the thought of the State for months. Auditor Moore's tabulation is interesting as indicating the sum that may be available within the borders of the State, from all sources and for all road purposes—new contracts, old contracts, maintenance and whatnot. As an answer to the other estimate, his statement is valueless; as an argument against a bond issue, his table is equally without merit. He does not confine his attention to the State highway system at all, though it was to extend and perfect this system that the Highway Department was reorganized, though it was in behalf of this system that the people of Virginia, led by Governor Trimble and far-seeing members of the General Assembly, appealed so widely and earnestly during the recent session.

The Auditor's figures, as a matter of fact, sustain the figures of the State Highway Department and the Good Roads Association. The State highway system is to receive no greater fund this year for new contracts than these authorities recently asserted. And that fund is wholly inadequate. With so little, the work of the Highway Department will soon come to a virtual standstill. That is the point to be held in mind. It is comparatively easy, by ferreting out the various sums, and possible sums, applicable—partly in fact, partly in theory—to road building and road maintenance, local and State, to assemble superficially impressive figures. But these figures should confuse no one. They do not mean that Virginia is prepared to proceed effectively with the construction of a respectable highway system; they do not mean that the Highway Department will be able to fulfill, or approach fulfilling, the popular expectations that have been aroused by its thoroughgoing reorganization.—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

DESTRUCTIVE FORCE DESTROYS ITSELF

Every destructive force sooner or later destroys itself.

Nature encourages only that which is constructive. So long as we are aiding nature to express herself efficiently we are successful. Failure is the result of opposing natural laws.

This is the idea back of the old proverb that right eventually will triumph over wrong, and the saying that there is good in everything.

A farmer goes into his field and clears it of stones and tree stumps. He turns the sod and plants selected seed. He cultivates it through the growing period. Finally, he reaps a good crop because he has assisted nature to express herself constructively in terms of wheat, or corn, or oats. Success is as certain to come to this man as night is sure to follow day.

Another man pours booze into his system; his body fights the poison; his strength is undermined; he ends up a failure. He has blocked the effort of nature to express herself constructively in terms of his body. He has operated as a destructionist, and he drops out of the running.

Nature always selects the device and the form that expresses energy most efficiently and constructively, just as she has, through millions of years, selected those animals which have proven most fit. The giant, brainless dinosaur that ate a half ton of food each day, gave way to the faster moving, more efficient horse; and now the horse is being superseded by the automobile. The dinosaur ceased to perform any constructive function, and when anybody or anything on this earth becomes useless or inefficient in advancing the scheme of things it ceases to exist.—Type Metal Magazine.

THE MAN WHO WON

He kept his soul unspotted
As he went upon his way,
And he tried to do some service
For God's people day by day;
He had time to cheer the doubter
Who complained that hope was dead;
He had time to help the cripple
When the way was rough ahead;
He had time to guard the orphan,
He had time to guard the orphan, and one day, well satisfied
With the talents God had given him he closed his eyes and died.

He had time to see the beauty
That the Lord spread all around;
He had time to hear the music
In the shells the children found;
He had time to keep repeating
As he bravely worked away:
"It is splendid to be living
In the splendid world today!"
But the crowds—the crowds that hurry
After golden prizes—said
That he never had succeeded,
When the clouds lay o'er his head—
He had dreamed—"He was a failure," they compassionately sighed.
For the man had little money in his pockets when he died.

—Record Herald.

LAUGH AND LIVE

THEY DO

Two men, strangers to each other, sat side by side in a suburban train. Finally, one turned to the other and became confidential.

"I," he said impressively, "am a starter of elevators in a city sky-scraper. When I signal them to go up, they go up. And your line is—?"

"I," said the other, "am an undertaker. When I signal them to go down, they go down."—The American Legion Weekly.

HE COULDN'T SHOOT SAUSAGES!

The sportsman strode into a poulterer's shop, and with the air of a man who meant business, said:
"Can you sell me a nice, plump pheasant?"

"I'm sorry, I have not a pheasant left, sir," replied the shopman "but here are some fine sausages that I can highly recommend. I'm sure your wife will be delighted with them."

"Sausages be blowed!" yelled the sportsman. "How can I tell my wife I shot sausages?"—Los Angeles Times.

NOT EVEN A WRIST WATCH?

Let's see:
There are two shoes, two stockings—
Hug, wait a minute, wait a minute!—Exchange.

IN MEMORIAM

In sad and loving remembrance of my dear sister, Sarah A. Thomasson, who died one year ago the 30th of March, 1921.

Often in my heart comes a bitter cry,
Why did my sister Allie die?
There comes the answer, so solemn and sweet,
She is not dead, she is only asleep.

In the graveyard softly sleeping,
Where the trees so gently wave,
Lies the one we loved so dearly,
In her lonely, silent grave.

Leaf by leaf the roses fall;
Soul by soul the Saviour calls;
Not for one, but for all;
We must go when the roll is called.

By her sister,
MRS. E. R. THOMASSON,
Haymarket, Va.

IN MEMORIAM

In sweet remembrance of my dear daughter, Lurean Nash, who departed this life fifteen years ago, Apr. 2, 1907.

Never shall I cease to love you,
Never shall your memory fade,
Sweetest thoughts forever linger
Around the grave where you are laid.
LOVING MOTHER.

Why Not Put in These Concrete Improvements This Spring?

EVERY farmer has a lot of little jobs he wants to get at. A new well curbing, a water-trough for the cattle, a stretch of walk for the folks, a manure pit out back of the barn; and a lot of other odds and ends he's been promising to get at "one o' these days."

Right now is a good time to do them. The forms are not hard to make, and you can mix and place the concrete yourself. You have practically everything you need. It's easy, if you follow a few simple directions. It will cost less than you think because concrete is the cheapest-in-the-end way to put in any kind of a farm improvement. Outlasts anything else you could use; rat-proof, fire-proof, rot-proof, rust-proof. Never needs expensive repairs. Fix up the place a bit this spring? Use Concrete, and make it with

SECURITY PORTLAND CEMENT STRENGTH

Security Cement comes to you ready to use and is especially adapted to the farmer's needs; guaranteed up to Government specifications. Sold in any quantity for any size job. Keep a few bags in the barn all the time. You will find it useful for odd jobs around the place.

We sell Security Cement and will be glad to give prompt service and practical suggestions for making Concrete Improvements that cost little and make your work easier.
