Belated Trains Do Not Deter Loving Virginia-North Carolina Couple. "Love laughs at locksmiths" and likewise at late trains and latest delays. This was forcefully demonstrated when the Rev. Dr. H. L. Quarles, pastor of the Baptist church, was aroused from his peaceful, silent slumbers, in the still, cold grayness of the early dawn of yesterday to pronounce the fateful words that would forever seal the faithful, fond hearts of Mr. Benjamin J. Bradfield, son of Mr. J. E. Bradfield, of near Manassas, and Miss Barbara Searcy, of Asheville, N. C.

Milking Machine in Operation to be Feature of School of Agriculture. Among the many exhibits at the Four-day School of Agriculture, which will begin at the courthouse on Monday at 10 a. m., there is none that will compare in interest with the milking machine which will be on exhibit and which will be demonstrated on some cows on Monday at 3:30 p. m. Milking machines have been used for many years and within the last five years in large numbers. While no one claims that they are perfect, yet they will save much of the drudgery and make the dairyman independent of his hired help. By all means come and see the wonderful invention tried. On the same day there will be a demonstration of how to select the best dairy cows and the use of cream separators. The conductor, Prof. W. K. Brainard, writes: "We are shipping today an exhibit consisting of a small dairy boiler, milking machine, farm turbine separator and a farm separator with gasoline engine attached."

Dr. Mayo Contributes Valuable Paper on Horse Staggers in Virginia. Inquiries and reports received at the Virginia Experiment Station, as well as reports in the state press, indicate that the losses among horses in this state this fall from a disease commonly called "blind," "sleepy" or "mad staggers," are unusually large. "Staggers" in horses is an inflammation of the brain or the spinal cord, or their coverings. This disease is caused by decomposing or mouldy food, particularly corn, probably by a poisonous substance that is formed in the food as a result of the mould. The first symptom usually noted is a refusal of food and a desire for water, and there is often some difficulty in swallowing. Following this there is dullness and drooping of the ears, partial or complete blindness, loss of consciousness, delirium and death; or in a few cases, recovery. Some cases become violent, running over obstacles, through fences or destroying stalls in a frenzy of excitement. Animals suffering from this form ("mad staggers") are irritable and must be approached with caution. If the animal does not die in this stage of the disease, it usually becomes quiet or stupid ("sleazy staggers"), leans against the side of the stall or manger, or pushes its head against a wall, often standing with the legs spread. Sometimes animals in the stupor state of the disease are thrown into a frenzy by the least excitement or irritation. Animals suffering from this disease, if they can be induced to move, generally go in a circle, either to the right or left, depending on which side of the brain is most seriously diseased. The treatment for a sick animal is very unsatisfactory. The animal should be confined where it cannot harm itself or persons. A brisk purgative (arsenite or castor oil) is excellent. If the purgative is to be given by the mouth, seven drachms of aloes in a ball or a quart of raw linseed oil may be given. Later a drachm of iodide of potash, or three drachms of bromide of potash dissolved in half pint of water can be given every six hours. Usually the excitement of drenching the animal does more harm than good. The only satisfactory treatment is prevention, by not feeding mouldy, wormy or decomposing corn or other food. Corn that has been attacked by the green corn worm at the tip and that is mouldy, is especially dangerous. This disease is not contagious and attacks no animals except horses, mules and asses. As a general rule the poison seems to disappear from the mouldy corn by March or April, as few deaths occur after that time. Dr. N. S. Mayo, Virginia Experiment Station, Blacksburg.

Farmers' Wives Invited to Attend Agricultural School This Month. The farmers' wives of the 8th Congressional District of North Carolina are all invited to attend all morning sessions of the Travelling School of Agriculture, to be in session at Manassas, Jan. 15-18, 1912. In the afternoon sessions all ladies are asked to follow the program given below. Miss Ella Agnew, of Burkeville, Va., who is connected with the U. S. Department of Agriculture, will direct these afternoon sessions of the school and it is expected they will prove very helpful to all ladies. The ladies of all the towns in the 8th Congressional District are also cordially invited to attend all meetings of interest to them, either the morning sessions, where women enjoy joint sessions, or the afternoon sessions, under Miss Agnew. Especially should women and youth hear Dr. Fletcher's illustrated lecture at the courthouse, Tuesday, Jan. 16, at 7:30 p. m., on "Improvement of Country Life in Virginia" and also Rev. W. H. Dexter's sermon on "Religion in Farming."

IN ANNOUNCING OUR AGENCY FOR THE PICTORIAL REVIEW PATTERNS. We do so with full confidence of their merits, having kept in mind in their selection that we must present our public with the best of everything, and we believe these patterns possess exceptional quality—also they would not be better than the patterns in Pictorial Review Patterns are complete in every way and very simple to understand, the instructions and guides being accurate to the smallest degree, enabling any home dressmaker to finish the garments the same as the picture on each pattern. Every fashion model is imported from such celebrated Parisian houses as Redfern, Paquin, Armand, Martini, and others. We could go on and on telling of Pictorial Review Patterns—and their merits—but we would rather you visit the new department and learn from the expert who is here direct from the makers to tell you all about them. See the latest fashion books—you will be delighted with the styles displayed.

SOME POINTS OF INTEREST ABOUT LADIES' HOME JOURNAL PATTERNS. Thousands of these patterns are now in use, not only in Washington, but all over the country, many women preferring Ladies' Home Journal Patterns to any other kind. The success of the Ladies' Home Journal Patterns is due principally to the rapidity with which their designers reproduce in an accurate manner the styles brought out by the great French designers. These designs, however, are Americanized, thus insuring a perfect French creation, modeled to the taste and comfort of hundreds of women of the same size insures an accuracy of fit that leaves little to be asked for. Complete instructions go with each pattern, thus enabling the merest tyro to do good work. The new patterns are now here as well as the late style books, which we would be glad to have you see during this special Pattern Week.

MISS MARSTELLER DEAD. Popular Young Nokeseville Lady Expires Suddenly on Monday - Funeral Wednesday. Miss Stella Marsteller, eldest daughter of Mr. Steller Marsteller, died at her home at Nokeseville on Monday, in the 25th year of her age. This was a great surprise to her many friends in this and other sections of the county. While she had been in rather delicate health for several months, her indisposition had given her family and friends no real serious concern, therefore her death came as a sudden shock to the community. Miss Marsteller was a young lady of sweet and amiable christian character and possessed unusual intelligence. She had a natural grace, had endeared her to all who knew her. She was a member of the Roman Catholic church, and her funeral was held from the Catholic Institute, where she had been educated, on Wednesday. The burial was in the Manassas Cemetery. She is survived by her father, two sisters, Mrs. Coleman Cockrell, of Washington, and Miss Mattie Marsteller, of Nokeseville, and by two brothers, Messrs. Eugene and Claire Marsteller, of Nokeseville.

KILLED BY TRAIN. We understand that Angiela Madison, a section hand employed on the Southern railway, was struck and killed by train No. 35 at Denton's Station last Monday morning. The unfortunate man was crossing from No. 31, and reached the other track just in time to be struck by No. 35. Mr. Sprinkel headed the list in all the territories. Mr. Sprinkel also won a $25.00 rain coat offered for the month of October. We congratulate him upon his success. —Rosewell Page has been nominated as Second State Auditor.

URGES PAGE BILL SUPPORT

Success of District Agricultural High Schools Depend Largely On Its Passage.

[The subjoined paper is the second of a series on Agricultural High Schools in Virginia, being contributed to the Southern Planter by Lieut. Geo. C. Round, of Manassas. It contains much useful information concerning legislation, and in conclusion urges Virginians to give their support to the Page bill, now pending in Congress. - Ed.]

In your issue for December I gave some general views on the above named institutions and an opinion as to legislation needed from the General Assembly of 1912.

In this article I will present a brief review of legislation effected during the four years past, so we can form an idea of the problem before us.

The Appropriation bill of 1908 is found a clause of six lines, on page 481, as follows:

"Twenty thousand dollars shall be devoted to the establishment of departments of agriculture, domestic economy and manual training in at least one high school in each congressional district of the state, to be conducted under such rules and regulations as the State Board of Education and the president of the Virginia College of Agriculture and Polytechnic Institute may prescribe."

The above clause introduced by way of amendment by Senator Mann, now the farmer Governor of Virginia, was the sole foundation of all secondary agricultural instruction for 1908-9 and 1910-11. I call special attention to the words quoted by me.

The next law on the subject is found on page 328 of the Acts of 1911, in which the following is recited:

"Whereas by an act approved on the 14th of March, 1908, the General Assembly of Virginia authorized the establishment of an 'agricultural school' in each 'congressional district' of the state.

By this act the supervisors were authorized to appropriate money for such institutions. The act of 1910, on page 382, makes a very marked advance in several respects beyond the act of 1908:

Section 1 provides for a thorough course in agriculture, the domestic arts and sciences and manual training, "in each congressional district," and provides that "at least one-fourth of the school time shall be devoted to these subjects."

Section 2 requires five acres of ground for "practical demonstration in agricultural science."

Section 3 also designates the institution as "the agricultural school" and section 5 speaks of "the agricultural high schools."

The term "departments of agriculture" does not appear in the act of 1910. The institution now provided for is not simply an old-time high school with a "department of agriculture" added. It is a school where boys and girls who wish to engage in agricultural pursuits can secure an education to fit them for rural life. It must be located in an agricultural environment, imbued in every grade by an agricultural spirit, and conducted by a man with agricultural enthusiasm, who has a conception of how children should be prepared in the lower grades for the "thorough course" the statute requires. The agricultural high school is an entity considerably in advance of a school with a "department of agriculture" or even a "department of agriculture."

Such at least is my idea. Sections 6 and 7 indicate that the state has determined on a permanent policy, for they provide regular annual appropriations to these schools, averaging $3,000 to each; and giving for the year ending February 23, 1912, a special sum of $2,500 to each for "buildings and equipment," and $1,000 for "extension" work to be connected with the said high school.

These two sums of $2,500 and $1,000 have not been available up to the present time, but it is to be hoped that the rumored shortage in the state treasury may not result in the sacrifice of any of our agricultural school interests.

There is a provision in section 5 which has not yet been carried out and for which I look with great hope and possibly with some impatience. It provides for "rules and regulations" to be prescribed by the State Board of Education and the president of the Virginia College of Agriculture. So far each of these ten schools have been carried on by independent boards and I assume that each of them is in some respects unlike the others and has been adapted more or less to local conditions. The time has come I submit, when there should be a unification of the ten schools under some expert supervision.

The statute of Nebraska authorizes the Superintendent of Public Instruction to appoint an "Inspector of Agricultural Training," who devotes his time to visiting the high schools approved by the state. Such a man, who could make regular reports to the State Board of Education and superintend the erection of the buildings, the installation of equipment and the needed modifications of curriculums, would be invaluable. If necessary to go to Canada or to the Northwestern states to secure an expert, we should not hesitate.

What we need is not a man with a high sounding title of an influential politician. We need a plain practical man, who has spent several years in teaching and superintending just such schools as we desire to establish. In this great experiment, we cannot afford to fail to equal ourselves of the experience of others. The same act of March 14, 1908, which laid the foundation for instruction in "agriculture, domestic sciences and manual training," provided for normal and industrial schools for women. Such an inspector and superintendent as is required for the agricultural schools might render invaluable aid in showing the future teachers in all the normal schools of the state, how they can lay the foundations on which the high schools and colleges of the future are to build.

The complete success of the district agricultural high schools must depend largely on the passage of the "Page Bill" now pending before Congress and the farmers of Virginia should rally to its support. It was my good fortune to attend, by appointment from the Governor, on December 14th and 15th, a representative gathering in the Senate building in Washington, called by the "Southern Commercial Congress" to organize a national campaign in favor of "Vocational Education."

The above bill received unanimous endorsement after some amendments. This is substantially the same bill known in the last Congress as the "Dolliver-Davis" bill. Its passage will bring good Federal appropriations to the support of our efforts to give agricultural instruction in high schools, normal schools and at Blacksburg. The schools are to remain as now fully under state control, but only those states are to receive assistance which have made ample preparation for utilizing the same. Hence it is of the highest importance that Virginia should put her agricultural schools on the best possible footing at once.

A young widow went to select a monument for her recently deceased husband. After due consideration she picked out a stone and ordered the following inscription placed upon it:

MY GRIEF IS MORE THAN I CAN BEAR. The man who was to erect the monument was a little tardy in doing it and the widow remarried before it was done. This fact worried him, as he feared that he might have to change the wording of the inscription. So he called upon the lady and told her that he was now ready to do his work, and after some hesitation asked her if she wished to change the wording of the inscription in any way.

She politely replied: "No, just as I gave it, only add at the end the word 'Alone.'"

"Look-a-here, porter," said an irate man, "ticking his head out of an upper berth on a Pullman, 'you've brought me one tan shoe and one black one.' 'Well! Ise gettin' mighty ca'less all right," remarked the porter with a puzzled air; "that's the second time that's happened this mornin'."

"Tommy," said his mother, "Grandmother is very sick, can't you go in and cheer her up?" "Yes'um," said Tommy, as he went into the sick room. "But in a few moments he came out disconsolate. 'Couldn't Mother,' he said; 'she seemed to get a little worse.' 'What did you say dear?' asked mother.

"Why, I asked her if she would like soldiers at her funeral."

AFTER BIG GAME. A man came running in one of our Manassas stores and said to the boy behind the counter: "A penny mousetrap, please, and hurry up. I want to catch a train with it!"

We wonder if he caught it. Mrs. Mike was noting around the house in every corner when her husband, Mike suddenly asked: "Pawst are yer Nokin' for?" She was rather startled and answered, "Nothing." "Thin ye'll find it in the jug where the whiskey was," replied Mike, resuming his reading.
