The practice of using new corn for starting cattle in the fall finds favor among regular feeders of steers. But the change from the old, dry, highly increase in the breeding of the Per-cheron in the United States in the last nutritions feed, to which the steer has two years. In the past the breeding been accustomed, to an entirely different ration—a feed high in moisture and specially palatable—calls for keep feeding ability, good judgment and skill on the part of the feeder. The individual steer must be dealt with, and the bunch as a whole must be given close attention, as individual feeding pays best.

The steer that has been used to s heating food for some time naturally craves a change to something cooling and succelent. However, at this stage it is not always what a steer likes that causes him to fatten most satisfactorily. Good feeders and herdame are often quoted as saying that steers and other animals should be fed what
