It is worth a lot to all thinking dairy farmers to keep constantly before their eyes the good records that good berds of cows are making. Take a farme who knows nothing of what the good herds are doing, and he is about th most helpless man on the job. are a few bits of experience which we take from the Tribun

concluded to try keeping a record o the amount of milk given by each six cows. To prove that keeping re ords was nonvenire he made an advance estimate. When the year's record was completed it was found that in order f merit the cows stood thus: First his fifth selection; second, a cow not hird were away down toward the lowr end of the list. This record proved hat one-fourth of his cows were being kept at an actual loss. The improve ment of every herd depends upon peri
