EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE

Splendid Article Concerning Meeting of State Teachers at Richmond.

and a state commission is to be appointed to visit the high schools, to see if they conform in equipment and in quality of work to recognized standards, and to grade them accordingly.

Another question of great interest from the high school standpoint was that of a proper adjustment or correlation of vocational and cultural work in the courses. One of the ablest visitors along these lines was Louis Smith, president of the Washington and Lee University.

On vocational work, he said, agricultural or business courses, and the informational courses like hygiene had come into vogue. They must be put in schools because of their practical importance in the life of the people, but it was of fundamental importance also that some of the studies should be retained.

For instance, which gives sufficient survey of the general laws of language—the interest of all human thinking—mathematics, the science of abstractness. Such studies power and as exercises for training and hardening the muscles of the mind, and for fitting the modern high school has an immense opportunity before it and it is now at the parting of the ways. In this great country with popular education being tried for the first time on a vast scale, the high school is likely to become the chief instrument in moulding the life of the people. But it must never forget that this same life is never forgotten. It cannot keep the purely cultural type because the need of the people for training in the practical affairs of every day life is too great. On the other hand it should not devolve itself to a purely vocational course, for then the whole plane of the national life would be lowered; and so, if the public high school rises to its great opportunity, it must satisfy both claims. It must give the vocational studies necessary for practical life, and at the same time the disciplinary and cultural subjects that train the power of the student and put him in the way of entering in some measure at least upon the rich and manifold intellectual and spiritual life.

Finally, not the least among the "vivid impressions" that the visitors to the conference carried away was of the manner in which the people of Richmond spend themselves and their wealth for their schools. Mothers' clubs on every hand look after the interests of the graded schools, provide for needy children, buy equipment from domestic science outfits to pianos and to pictures and casts for school room decoration. As for their high school it was inspiring to see the magnificent building that had been provided. A building that filled nearly a city square with auditorium and gymnasium, a beautiful library with a paid librarian, a school hospital with a trained nurse, typewriting, business and domestic science departments, manual training shops and thoroughly equipped laboratories for every science taught in the school. Contrasting our home situation we find, of course, a much smaller school with about one-fourteenth of the pupils and only a small fraction of the number of teachers of the Richmond high school. But we have no gymnasium, no auditorium; our laboratory outfits for the science teaching must be put in the corner of any classroom that happens at the time to be available. There are no not even enough classrooms to hold the reciting classes, but they must overflow in the green house or cloak rooms; yet up to this time we have managed to maintain as good a standard of work as the Richmond high school as evidenced by the right of certificate to the same great colleges and universities. But we cannot keep up this quality of work unless the necessary needs of the school can be provided for. Last year the normal appropriation from the State was cut down seven hundred and fifty dollars, one-half of the amount previously given. In addition to that the amount received from the town and county tax was reduced about eight hundred dollars, thus making the total loss in the year's income over fifteen hundred dollars. With the present rate of increase in the school we need more equipment, more room and more teachers. The school must maintain three courses, the agricultural and normal in addition to the regular course because of the State appropriations for them. With this multiplication of the work there are not enough teachers and the grades are becoming so crowded that there are not enough for them to do with full effectiveness the preparatory work for high school entrants.

Our Manassas high school is so nearly supported by the State appropriations and the consequent cost of the school to the community is so small compared to the cost of maintaining the same grade of work elsewhere that it would seem as if the situation could be easily relieved and the school thus enabled to live up to its past standards and to its reputation for thorough and scholarly work.

PATRONIZE HOME TRADE

Today is the 13th of December, and Christmas Day will be here in less than two weeks. Less than two weeks of crowded shopping, that under ordinary circumstances, would take as many months at the very least. "Do your Christmas shopping early" has been oft repeated, but it has gained little good in proportion to the energy with which it has been fired. Less than two weeks before Christmas, and we venture to say there are more Christmas preparations still in the thinking stage, than at any sign post on the road to completion. Therefore, knowing full well that the Christmas rush has not begun in earnest, we haste to remind our people that Manassas stores have EVERYTHING in the Christmas line from a big warm muffler for grandpa to a baby rattle for the tiniest of the flock. Spend your money in town as long as you can. Keep your money in Manassas that it may be returned to you. If you are too late for any particular article, that is a different matter. The city stores, arranged to accommodate the multitudes, are certain to fill your wants, and it is only fair to patronize them when it is impossible to procure the desired article in your home town.

Otherwise if you want Manassas to grow—and it takes the money—patronize Manassas business, that it may be business in the true sense of the word.

THE SCHOOL QUESTION

In another column will be found a splendid article written by our High School principal on the State Educational Conference recently held in Richmond. One of the chief points made by the writer is the effort of the Richmond people to keep their school on a standard second to none in the State or in the country, sparing neither time, thought or expense to make the Richmond High School what it is, one of the finest institutions in the State.

And yet Manassas ranks equally with the Richmond High School, despite the vast difference in size, building, equipment, apparatus—everything. Our graduates are received without examination by any college or university where the Richmond graduate is accepted.

Considering the matter from this standpoint, what would be the rank of Manassas High School were our people awakened to the situation, and ready to give their undivided efforts to aid in the great movement for better schools? With the name achieved in recent years without the great organization and party work of the Richmond schools, is it not an inspiring moment to stop and consider the possible standard had our future progress begun at an earlier date?

"Future" progress, yes, for we are certain that it is only a matter of time before our Prince William people will come to the realization of the great and undeniable importance of the school system of today, and the inestimable advantages of the school system of the future. To quote: "Our Manassas High School is so nearly supported by the State appropriation, and the consequent cost of the school to the community so small compared to the cost of maintaining the same grade of work elsewhere, that it would seem as if the situation could be easily relieved, etc."

A CALL FOR AROUSEMENT

In championing before the governors' conference mob-law, and in consigning the constitution to perdition, Governor Cole Blease, of South Carolina, did not represent the higher civilization of that state, the better sentiment of her people or their sense of the proprieties of time and occasion.

But he did represent unfortunate political conditions in South Carolina, a lethargy on the part of the better element, and a passive falling away from pride in high and inspiring traditions which alone have rendered his misrepresentation possible.

We would fain believe that the false light in which Governor Blease has presented the true South Carolinians to the world, by seizing the opportunity to iterate his violent views, in such an important and notable "national" gathering, in a sense, will have the effect of stirring the state to a revolution at the polls that will bring her into her own again as an example of that lofty and high-minded, politically and sociologically. We not only would fain believe it; we do believe it.

In his discordant and ill-timed note, Governor Blease unconsciously and unintentionally issued a vibrant call for South Carolina arousement: to knowing herself and what duty to herself and to the country at large demands of her, in the way of political regeneration and repudiation of the influences and teachings that would drag her down from the enviable pedestal she has occupied in the sisterhood of states.—News-Leader.

UNCLE REMUS DAY

Tuesday, December 10th, was celebrated in the public and private schools of Atlanta, as "Uncle Remus Day," commemorating the birthday anniversary of the famous author of Uncle Remus. The memorial exercises were arranged by the Uncle Remus Memorial Association, and K'appa Kappa, the beginning of a movement that promises to be nation-wide.

A fund, providing for the maintenance of a museum at "Snapbean Farm," is being raised, and the Association expects to have it completed within the year.

Uncle Remus Day is a genuine appreciation of Joel Chandler Harris, the beloved Uncle Remus, and there will be little trouble in spreading the movement from Atlanta, not over the Southland alone, but over the whole country, East and West, and North and South, where Uncle Remus has been an unfailing source of pleasure to old and young, for many years.

HETTY GREEN advocates the chewing of onions for health and longevity. Wonder is she's sufficiently popular to inaugurate this pleasant pastime.

MONTICELLO STILL PRIVATE PROPERTY

Mrs. Martin W. Littleton, wife of the New York Congressman, lost her fight for the government purchase of Monticello, Monday evening in the House of Representatives.

By a vote of 141 to 101, the House rejected a concurrent resolution, providing for a commission to investigate the advisability of the purchase of Monticello for a National park. The Virginia delegation present voted against the measure, which passed the Senate at the last session at Congress.

Congressman Levy, owner of the estate, never moved from his seat, evidently confident of the outcome.

It is gratifying to all thinking people that the movement is not a success, in that the compulsive purchase of Monticello, from its lawful owner, is only a legalized form of robbery, which is nothing more or less than a disservice to all concerned. Mr. Levy has restored the property to the best of his ability, and visitors are always welcome. Since he is unwilling to make the proposed sale, it is only rank ingratitude to force it upon him, under any circumstances.

The estate is in good condition, as nearly as possible to Monticello as occupied by Jefferson himself, and always open to visitors—what more can be expected of Mr. Levy?

A MICHIGAN man holds the record for the lowest price received for a horse in good condition. The other day a man came into his livery stable, asking a price on the animal, and offering all he had in his pocket. The offer was taken, and 31 cents was forthcoming! Just another case of a pig in a bag.

COMPLETE returns from the recent election indicate that officially, only one party exists in North Carolina, as a party is required to poll a vote of 50,000 in the gubernatorial contest to insure official recognition. The progressive vote came within seventy of being recognized.

A MANASSAS INTERVIEW

Mr. Evans Tells His Experience.

The following brief account of an interview with a Manassas man who was one of the first to deal with kidney trouble with keen interest by every citizen.

O. H. Evans, carpenter, Prescott Ave., Manassas, Va., said: "I had no back pain, but I could hardly do anything. Every sudden movement caused such intense pain I hardly knew what to do. I had been advised by Dr. Kibbey Pitts, and as I had seen the remedy advertised, I gave it a trial. The results surprised and delighted me. My trouble was removed in a short time."

The above was the substance of Mr. Evans' testimonial, given on November 7, 1910. He was interviewed by one of our correspondents on the 20th of March, 1912, and said: "I have had no further trouble from kidney complaint. You may continue to use my testimonial."

C. A. Sinclair, Bryan Gordon, E. H. Bryant, Walter Merchant, Douglas Merchant, Walter Flaherty, J. G. Lunsford, G. C. Brenton, G. Raymond Ratcliffe, John L. Elliot and J. H. Rouzie, whose place was the scene of combat.

Here is a good idea from our esteemed contemporary, the Loudoun Mirror: "If conditions in Leesburg do not suit you, don't criticize them to everyone you meet, but make your complaint, and if you know a way to improve conditions, suggest that, to the Complaint Committee of the Leesburg Town Improvement League, who will investigate the matter with the proper persons, and as far as they can help adjust same. Any communication addressed to the Complaint Committee in care of the Secretary of the Leesburg Town Improvement League will reach such committee and receive attention."

The chemists and bacteriologists of the Maryland-Virginia Oyster Commission will convene in Richmond next Tuesday to compare their analyses and draw conclusions from the set of samples of water and oysters taken from the Potomac, on their second excursion down the River at various points from Washington to the Bay. This investigation and systematic testing of water and oysters from the Potomac is a direct result of a bulletin issued last summer by the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, which made the assertion that oysters from this stream are dangerous for consumption on account of the presence of colon bacilli and kindred bacteria.

Mr. Frank Lewis, of the Sudley neighborhood, holds the record hay crop for the season in this county. About 40 tons have been baled already and as many more are yet in stacks. The class of '13, Manassas High School, has received the class pins recently ordered. The design is simple but unique, with the Virginia seal in the center, circled by a band of purple, lettered with Manassas High School in gold. The pin is small and round, something less than a inch in diameter, and made of gold with an irregular edge, and patent clasps and initials on the back.

Mr. Robert Lee Montague, of Washington, entertained a small audience Tuesday evening in the Chapter room of the United Daughters of the Confederacy with a lecture on the humor and reminiscences of the folklore of Virginia before the war. The proceeds were used for the benefit of the Home for Needy Confederate Women in Richmond. It is to be regretted that the attendance was so small.

Dear Friend:—
The Best Christmas gift is a bank account. Start your children in the habit of saving before they acquire the habit of spending. No matter what the future holds in store for your little ones the knowledge of the true value of money will do more toward assisting them on the road to success, than any other single thing you can do for them.

It merely requires your first guidance—they will want to increase the deposits and see the account grow.

It is an education in itself.

Yours very truly,

An Invitation.

All the children in town of 4, 5 and 6 years of age, who are not already attending school, are invited to spend the week before Christmas, beginning December 16, in the Kindergarten from 9 a. m. to 12 o'clock each day.

This is the children's own season and we make it very worthwhile, as well as a happy time for every child in Kindergarten. There is much criticism of the fact that the Christmas of to-day is not carried out with enough thought for the children, so we want to help them as far as possible to have a happy Christmas this year.

We hope all parents will consider this invitation seriously and will make a special effort to let their children attend Kindergarten for these few days.

HISTORY AND PHILOSOPHY

Editor The Virginian: Sir—History repeats itself and human nature changes not. Over a dozen years ago I lived in Newport, Ky. One morning in a longly spot, just back of the city, a headless body of a woman was found. Detectives went to work and in a few days it was known that the woman was Pearl Bryan, of Greencastle, Ind. Scott Jackson, of the same city, was a dental student in Cincinnati. He and his roommate, Alonzo Walling, were arrested for the crime. They were tried for this awful deed. They had the very finest lawyers, who did their best to save them. The jury returned a verdict of murder of first degree and punishment—death. The case went to the Supreme court and was affirmed, and day fixed for the execution. Sentiment and sympathy broke loose; thousands of good people signed petitions; flowers filled their cells; the best food was sent to them. One lady, teaching in the city schools, lost her position by her devotion. Many people seemed to lose their heads and thought these men were saints and not demons. The governor was unreformed, and the men paid the penalty of that horrible crime. Over a half dozen years ago I was living in Knoxville, Tenn. John McPherson, of a fine family, lived most of his time on the bowery. One night he killed a husband in a house of sin. In trying to get away he shot his friend, the deputy sheriff. After some months he was arrested, tried, convicted and sentenced to die. The Supreme court studied carefully the evidence, etc., and said the lower court was fair and was guided by facts in rendering the decision.

Sentiment and sympathy joined hands and went forth to set aside what judges said and what the jury did. Many good people said John McPherson was such a fine looking fellow that he ought not to die. Petitions with thousands of names went to the governor, but he said he could not set aside the judgment of jury and courts. He was executed and the funeral was a big one. People were so given over to sentiment that some of Knoxville's fine woman acted as honorary pallbearers. An editorial in one of the papers said: "There were fifteen hundred people at the hangman's funeral and about thirty at the funeral of one of the women in the city. The more horrible the crime, the greater becomes sentiment. Virginia is having the same experience in the Allen case. I am not up on this case, I have not read very much of the details. But somebody is wrong, else seventy thousand people would not ask the governor to set aside the rulings of courts and the finding of jurymen. Is it not an awful sad day for Virginia when courts and jury become so unjust that seventy thousand people ask the governor to come to rescue, else the innocent suffer? Were the courts and jury moved by evidence or prejudice? Were the seventy thousand moved by justice or sentiment?

The lower court convicted. The higher court said it was just. But here are seventy thousand fine people who differ with the Supreme court. Now, we who know nothing of the law and evidence, whom shall we believe? Sentiment rose like a mighty storm in Kentucky and Tennessee in the cases named. Now has it risen in old Virginia? I am too far from the seat of operation to say and I know too little about the case to pass judgment. I well know when the people speak there is something behind them. Now, in these three murder cases I have referred to, the people spoke, but were they moved by justice or sentiment? If by the former, our courts are a farce; if the latter, sad for the people. It is sad any way we take it. If courts become so awfully corrupt that the public have to rise up and move into court-houses and slay the officials, it is truly sad. On the other hand, if people go into courthouses and shoot through the court officers, we are in a bad way. Carroll county courthouse saw an awful tragedy. The courts have spoken and so have seventy thousand people. Who are right? Where is dwellish justice, prejudice or sentiment? Have our courts become so bad that the people have no confidence in them? Have the people become so sentimental that the courts are failures? Who shall pass the judgment on murderers, courts or the people? There is an awful wrong somewhere and its in court records or people's petitions, one. Who knows and who can tell and who would believe him if he wags to tell?

Sentiment and prejudice are like bubbles upon the deep, they dazzle men's eyes for a little while, then burst and are gone. Justice is like a rock that rears its head in the ocean, against which comes the roll of the surf, the sweep of the tide and the waves from afar, around which winds howl and over which thunders roar, yet it lifts its head to disrupt empires with clouds and to battle with storms. G. W. PERRYMAN, Norfolk, Va.

LETTER FROM OCCOQUAN.

The Educational Conference held in Richmond, Nov. 27 to 30, 1912, was a meeting that must surely have uplifted every one who attended it with the right motive. The different meetings ranged from discussions about the little country school to those concerning the great colleges and universities and all were equally interesting to teachers who attended them.

The speakers who conducted these meetings were the very best that could be obtained in the state and many prominent speakers from other states. The valuable knowledge that they imparted to their hearers has been carried to many schoolrooms of Virginia to make the balance of their session both bright and instructive. One of the most powerful speeches of the conference was delivered the last night (Friday) by Dr. Henry Louis Smith, president of Washington and Lee University. Dr. Smith told of the importance of education in such a beautiful manner that his audience sat spellbound, gazing upon mental visions that he drew for them in well-chosen words. In closing I want to say that the city of Richmond and the Richmond teachers did everything in their power to entertain the visitors. I also want to say that any teacher who misses the annual convention not only deprives himself of a great deal, but deprives the pupils under his charge of a great deal that is so desirable. A. DELEGATE.

Concerning "Fall Air."

[From The Chicago Journal.] This is the season when many householders shut windows and bar doors against the "raw fall air." Unfortunately for this plan, fall air is the only air to be had at this time of year. You may take your fall air "raw" and fresh, or you may take it close and cooked. But fall air you must have, unless you quit breathing. Raw air is better than foul air. For every "cold" caught, get out doors, twenty are caught in the house, and usually in close, badly ventilated rooms. Fresh air is just as necessary in fall as in spring, in winter as in summer; and those who try to starve their lungs of oxygen always pay the price.
