IMPRESSIVE OBSEQUIES AT ARLINGTON

IMPRESSIVE ceremonies in which representatives from all sections of the country and a large majority of the populace of Washington including the Nation's Chief Executive, the Cabinet and Legations, joined, marked the obsequies of the beloved victims—sixty-seven sailors of lost identity—Saturday, in Arlington cemetery.

The air of the funeral dirge was heard upon the streets of the National Capital as its people stood with bared heads on either side of Pennsylvania avenue at the thirty-four caskets covered with handsome floral tributes and festooned with the National colors slowly wended their way to "the silent city."

When the cortège arrived at the State, War and Navy buildings the caissons drew up in solemn array before the President, the members of the Cabinet and others representative of the official and civil life of Washington. The services were simple, yet deep and impressive closing the final chapter in the great national tragedy which had its beginning in Havana harbor fourteen years ago, when over 250 officers and men went to their death through Spanish treachery. Before President Taft spoke the Rev. John P. Chidwick, chaplain of the ill-fated Maine had told of the meaning of the ceremony and recalled the horrible explosion that snuffed out the lives of the men whose remains lay in the caskets before him.

"I shall recall the catastrophe only in a few words," said Father Chidwick. "It horrors impressed us too vividly ever to be forgotten. The dark, starless night; Havana sparkling with light and gay with pleasure, as our men lay asleep in their hammocks peacefully in the hands of God. Suddenly the fatal flash, the loud report, then the bodies of men with fragments of the ship flying through the air and then the cries of the wounded, drowning and dying. These were what transpired when the blowing up of the Maine when plunged the nation into war and left an impression upon its memory never to be effaced by the hand of time."

UNDERWOOD TAX BILL

It is to be hoped that the Underwood income tax bill which is now pending in Congress will not fail of passage and approval by the President in order that sufficient compensation to the revenues may be made to exclude the objection now obtaining towards putting sugar on the free list.

Certainly the income tax can be more easily borne than the present tax on sugar as those who it will affect are better able to stand the extra tax than the multitude who are struggling against the high cost of even a bare existence of which the present cost of sugar is a necessary part.

The Underwood bill changes a most absurd and ridiculously lopsided tax law into a uniform and rational measure. It is nothing, however, except the existing income tax so broadened as to be of universal character and application, and the existing law has had the sanction of the Supreme Court.

Viewed from a critical standpoint the bill is an instance of remarkable parliamentary skill and a disclosure of financial statesmanship of a high order. The average consumer is watching this measure and trusting to the sense and good judgment of the Democrats and progressive Republicans of the Senate to secure its passage.

BRYAN SATIRICAL

In a RECENT issue of The Commonwealth, William Jennings Bryan, the editor, gave satirical and published the following editorial appeal to President Taft:

Mr. PRESIDENT: We, the burgesses of the United States, beg to call your attention to a grievance. For years we have suffered injustice at the hands of the courts. There is a law which by its terms prohibits every combination for the domination of burglary. We request that this law should be construed to prohibit only unreasonable burglaries. To this end we ask for the appointment to the Supreme Court bench of a criminal lawyer with a record which will assure us that he will sympathize with our effort to rob the public to a reasonable extent. We need not present our arguments in favor of our business; it is natural development of our civilization.

If we have not established as many colleges and libraries as the trust magnates it is because we have been hampered by a construction of the law urged upon the court by demagogues and destroyers of the peace who have appealed to the passions of the mob and arrayed the people against us.

Knowing your sense of fairness and appreciating what you have done for the trust, we cherish the hope that while we do not collect much as the trusts, we will get on the highway to the prosperity which they now enjoy. For you will see that the highway to the prosperity which they now enjoy.

Very truly yours, your obedient servant,

PARAGRAPHS

By an almost unanimous vote of the State Central Committee, Norfolk gets the State Democratic Convention which will convene on May 23.

CHAS. W. MORSE, the bank wrecker, is as frequently at the point of death without dying as the Allen gang is surrounded without capture.

How long it takes sound to travel a given distance is largely hypothetical, but it is absolutely certain that it takes much less time by means of the dinner horn in a call to breakfast.

CAPTAIN ROBINSON of Charles Town, Md., has just returned to his home after spending several days in Northumberland County making contracts with trappers for tomatoes for Maryland canneries. The contract price is 50 cents a bushel. Why should these tomatoes be shipped to Maryland if there was a cannery factory at Manassas?

With two presidential candidates in its membership, the Democratic party of Washington proceeds, with brother harmony and greater efficiency than was to have been expected. Speaker Clark's friends are working like Trojans for his nomination with increased hopefulness and with exceptional care not to say or do that which would be ungenerous toward rivals.

The air of the funeral dirge was heard upon the streets of the National Capital as its people stood with bared heads on either side of Pennsylvania avenue at the thirty-four caskets covered with the National colors slowly wended their way to "the silent city."

WILL SAVE TIME AND ANNOYANCE

Strict Observance of These Rules Will Make You Favorite With Officials
Make Clerical Force Earn Salaries.

The following rules are recommended to the careful attention of those who do business at the banks. They will be the means of saving a great deal of time and annoyance:

If you have business with a bank, put it off until the bank's closing hour, or if possible a little later as it looks more business-like to rush in just as the bank is closing.

In depositing money try to get it upside down and wrong end foremost, so that the teller may have a little exercise in straightening it up before counting it. It is best not to take your bank-book with you, but call at another time to have your deposit entered.

You can thus make two trips to the bank when one would have answered.

If check is made payable to your order, be careful not to endorse it before mailing it to the teller, but let him return it to you and wait while you endorse it. This helps to pass the time and is a pleasure and relief to the teller.

You can generally save time when making a deposit by counting your money down to the teller as you can nearly always count more speedily and accurately than he.

When you make a deposit do not use a deposit ticket, but mix your checks and bills indiscriminately together, as it expedites matters exceedingly. If you make a deposit of one hundred dollars and give a check for fifty dollars it would be well for you to call frequently at the bank and ascertain how your account stands, as it makes a favorable impression upon the bank officials as to your business qualifications.

Never keep any record of when your notes fall due and if they are protested, consult the bank for not giving you notice.

Always date your checks ahead; it is a never-failing sign that you keep a good bank-balance, or if you do not wish it generally known that you are doing a good business, do not deposit your money until about the time you expect your checks will be in.

A strict observance of these rules will make your account desirable at any bank and make you a general favorite with its officials besides having the effect of making the clerical force earn their salary and have less time to sit around and read newspapers.

MR. BRITTON CONVALESCENT

Milford Mills, March 21, 1912.
EDITORS DEMOCRAT.

You are somewhat over-worked what you said in my issue of March 21, about my being able to resume my duties at the mill. While it is true, and I am glad indeed that it is true, after I am on my feet, I can walk around some—ever over to the mill. But with all the assistance I can give, it will take Nature several weeks to place this old mangled body of mine in a condition to resume my duties at the mill.

Now let me express my sincere thanks and appreciation for the many deeds of kindness and expressions of sympathy and the many pleasant visits you have had since I have been here. May the good Lord bless his hands in blessing each one of you, is my prayer.

J. F. BRITTON.

OFFICE IN PEOPLE'S NATIONAL BANK BUILDING, MANASSAS, VA.

It was certainly fine to see the champion Hackney stallion, "Heacham Goldhider," owned by W. B. Bullock, proprietor of Birmingham Stock Farm, wearing his blue ribbons and championships around his lordly and arched neck, stepping so proud, lifting his feet high, touching his chin with his knees and going with such a dash. He is a horse of which Prince William county should be proud of.

The magnificent imported Percheron stallion, "Energy," a black weighing 1800 pounds, winner of many first prizes and championships at the leading horse shows; the beautiful black Percheron stallion, "Belmont," weighing 1,750 pounds, also owned by Mr. Bullock.

There was also at this horse show the beautiful Hackney stallion, "Brownwood," purchased from W. B. Bullock, making a very fine show and a horse which should be seen to be appreciated.

Roop at Eastern College before returning to his home in Battle Creek, Michigan. This is Mrs. Baldwin's first visit to Manassas in twelve years, and she marvels at the growth of the town during that period.

The Godfrey homestead situated near the Horse Show grounds, and occupied by Milton Reeves, was totally destroyed by fire late Tuesday afternoon. Mr. Reeves was absent from home at the time and cannot account for the origin of the fire. The loss on building and furniture is estimated at $300. Mr. Reeves lost all he had, including a good sum of money. He had no insurance.

The Washington Star gives this news special attention, and no more entertaining sporting sheet can be found than in its daily and Sunday issues.

The Manassas Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, held an historical meeting yesterday in commemoration of the battle of Shiloh. The meeting was highly entertaining and instructive and those who failed to attend missed an evening of social enjoyment.

Rev. Harwood Myers, pastor of the Courtland, Virginia, M. E. Church, South, was a week end visitor to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Myers, in this place.

Mr. W. P. Myers, in this place, and preached in Grace M. E. Church Sunday morning.

Dr. J. M. Lewis, accompanied by Messrs. Henry Camper and R. M. Jenkins, went to Yates Ford, the first of the week in search of Dr. Lewis' medicine and instrument case which was lost in the river, in Philadelphia, was a Manassas visitor during the past week.

No trace of the property was found.

While All Merchant was practicing the pole-vault for the approaching Field and Track Meet, Father of Mrs. Smith, John Stokes, who was a well known blacksmith of Manassas and a highly respected colored citizen, severely ill to necessitate the putting of the injured member in splints. The accident will, in all probability, prevent the young man from taking part in the Athletic contests.

The stock visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Ebd, in Saturday morning, April 13, 1912, at 10 o'clock in the normal room of the Bennett Building. This will be an open meeting. Teachers are urged to bring questions to be discussed. Mr. Tyler will answer questions concerning the teachers' examinations, which are to be held May 2, 3, and 4. As this is the last meeting of the session a full attendance is desired.

Miss Flora Bullock, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Bullock of the Birmingham Stock Farm, near town, was presented last week, with a beautiful peacock by John T. Judd Jr. This bird measures ten and a half feet from beak to tail and his majestic strut and handsome plumage is the admiration of all observers. The donor is a son of J. Judd, of Alexandria, who purchased at a cost of $6,000 the large and famous Hayfield farm near Alexandria.

At a good roads meeting held at Nokesville Saturday, it was decided to petition the Court to order an election on a bond issue of $45,000 for Brentsville district.

Should the vote result in the affirmative, it is proposed that the money shall be expended as follows: $15,000 to be expended on roads above the railroad, $15,000 to be expended on roads below the railroad and $15,000 to be applied towards that portion of the Quebec-Miami highway that may run through Brentsville district.

A track team of seven men will represent the Manassas High School at the Southern Inter-scholastic Meet to be held there under the auspices of the University of Virginia, on Saturday, April 13. In this meet all the principal preparatory schools of this section compete and some very good records have been made there. The following team will run for the honor of the Orange and Blue: Sanders, Weir, Johnson, Brower, Moon, Round and Merchant.

Miss Lola D. Metz, director of the Domestic Science Class and instructor in algebra and latin of the first and second year classes of the Manassas High School, has been appointed a teacher in the Charlottesville Normal School, and will enter upon her duties during the early part of June.

Westwood Hutchison, cashier of the National Bank of Manassas, and G. Raymond Ratcliffe, cashier of the Peoples National Bank, elected trustees of Eastern College at a meeting of the board last Tuesday evening in President Root's office. Thos. H. Lion was elected secretary of the College Corporation.

A team of Robert Lewis attached to a buggy took fright and dashed down Main Street as far as Annaburg gate Monday afternoon, causing other drivers to scatter or vehicle resulted.

The white hen with her brood of multi-colored chickens, in the window of the Prince William Pharmacy, has attracted much attention. One observer remarked on Monday, as the hen was industriously pecking the ground scattered around her, that the next change of program would be a nest of wooden eggs.

Work was resumed on the gymnasium of Eastern College Monday of this week. It is to be completed for commencement exercises to be held May 25-26.

Dr. W. F. Merchant, received Sunday, the news of the death in the State institution, near Lynchburg, of Gideon Merchant, 25 years old, younger son of the late W. C. Merchant and half brother of Dr. Merchant.

protects your orchard from this pest. It is a clear, cherry-colored liquid that will not crystallize and form particles which clog up the spray nozzle, so that you can use it successfully as a spray for fungus disease and for sucking insects. It mixes readily with Asenate of Lead and in the spraying machine is especially effective as a combination insecticide and fungicide spray. If you have any scale in your orchard or any fungus trouble, to spray while your trees are dormant with some effective material.

ROLL OF HONOR

Following is the Roll of Honor for Catharpin school for month of February, 1912:

CHAPTER XXXVII

He swung about with the weapon poised, crying: "Stop!" The other man was apparently trying to escape by the door to the left but was unable to move far from it to escape the trap. He had a hand on the door handle. O'Rourke heard a crash and shatter of broken window-glass he fired and saw, still indistinctly through pungent wreath of smoke, the figure real and collapse upon itself.

The man had hardly fallen when O'Rourke stood up and with one bound and a single effort, wrenching a revolver from relaxing fingers. Then, stamping back, he took stock of the murderous-minded intruder, and saw at his feet, writhing, the figure of a Chinese coolie, a type of the lowest class, who faced a set yellow mask, steely, unshaved little feelings; and the stark set black eyes burned with unquenchable hatred as they glared up at the conqueror.

O'Rourke's bullet had penetrated the man's chest; and sharpened teeth of a rat, a cripson stain spread on the bosom of his coat, the proof.

When he had recovered, O'Rourke shock amazement held. A third assassin had been added to the mystery with no effect other than to render it more opaque and dense than before.

The telephone, its raucous voice now long since stilled, came into his mind, and he was moved to test it.

Before he could move, however, a footfall on the veranda started him, and his ears were ringing with a command couched in terses, curt English: "Hands up!"

CHAPTER XXXIII.

A man stood outside of the window, his face pale, expressionless against the night in cool white light of a lamp military cut he extended right hand, training a revolver on the Irishman's head.

"Faith!" cried O'Rourke with genuine relief, "you're more welcome than I imagined in Hades. Good evening to you, sir!"

"With all the pleasure in the world," O'Rourke elevated his hands. "I've two revolvers on my person," he volunteered amiably, "before you go any further you'll be wanting to take a walk from me. I'm not thinking, however, what you see, I quite believe I have agreed with the assassin with whom I'm dealing my unguarded attitude, that allows to keep your hands where they are for the time being. What does this mean?"

"Tell me yourself, sir! I'll make a handsome present," returned the O'Rourke composedly. "I've been advised to bring him to RETOUR. Hand me that knife, please."

Wondering, O'Rourke tendered him the weapon that had brought death to the man he'd just slain.

"A Man Stood in One of the Windows," he said. "But I think I know a way to bring him to RETOUR. Hand me that knife, please."

Wondering, O'Rourke tendered him the weapon that had brought death to the man he'd just slain.

"Randall & McCoy," he said. "I know," said the boy briskly. "You've been so free with your information that I don't doubt you will place me under further obligation to you by turning your back and depositing your weapons on the desk before me. I needn't bore you by remarks upon the folly of tales and legends, however, as you are well aware of the experience after O'Rourke, owing with a fair and even cross. "There now, what else may be your pleasure?"

"I have some news for you, sir," he said.

"Right-o, me boy! O'Rourke executed the prescribed evolution and, turning, prepared to descend him; a thought later he felt the Chapman's hands rapidly gripping through his pockets. When, with a very loud, sharp, bitter, stepped his revolver, table and O'Rourke exchanged a look.

"You've apparently told the truth thus far," he said. "Now what'd you know about this?" Then, with a round the room. "Be careful what you say, I say. I'm Couch, Lieutenant sub-chief of police, and you'd better be more welcome," declared O'Rourke. "I was on the point of trying to get by on telephone when I saw the tree him. How the devil did he happen to drop in so opportunely?"

"I was coming up-stream in the go ice launch, on the night tour of inspection, and stopped at the landing just below this— the grounds here lead down to the river, you know— when those bad fellows, the Chapman brothers, got away again. I took in here and if everything was all right— said he'd been unable to get any response since nightfall. Now?"

Carefully and hesitatingly O'Rourke wove the events of the day into a straight narrative, starting with the delivery to "The Pool of Flame" of a brief, brief message upon which he had been working over night. "I took in here and if everything was all right— said he'd been unable to get any response since nightfall. Now?"
