It is claimed that Underwood, on account of his limited education, is giving the government such services as are far in excess of the compensation allowed.

It is said that ten years ago the country's exports of manufactured articles did not amount to half a billion dollars. In the flecal year just ended they aggregated more than one billion dollars. If the manufacturers of this country can compete so successfully with their rivals in other countries, why the necessity of protection by high tariff duties against competition at home? Before the presidential campaign is over this question will have been pretty well brought to the attention of the consumers and explained.
